Six-month transition envisaged

By Our Foreign Staff The Prime Minister of

Barbados has disclosed that Caribbean countries involved in the American intervention in Grenada plan a six-month transition period leading to elections on the island. Mr Thomas Adams, in an intérview broadcast in London yesterday, said the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States, of which Grenada is a member, had acted in accordance with its founding charter in supporting the invasion, "to re-establish law and order".

His reference to a six-month transition period - during which, he said, "it is intended to dishand the Grenadian Army and re-establish the police force" - belies initial hopes expressed in Washington that foreign troops would leave Grenada quickly.

Sources in Barbados said that Sir Paul Scoon, the Governor-General has been released from house arrest at his residence and now was at the new airport at Salines, with US and Caribbean

That affirmation and the urgent appeal for negitiations were not really new in that they form the official basis for Cuban foreign policy. In recent years, Cube has repeatedly emphasized its commitment to dialogue and has blamed Washington for trouble spots in Central America.

He said that Russia had observed a moratorium on SS20 deployment in European Russia - something the West disputes - and added that if an agreement was reached at Geneva, Moscow would also cease deployment of SS20s in the Far East.

The Geneva talks could continue if Nato deployments did not start. But the appearance of new American missiles would make "continuation of the present talks impossible".

There are no grounds at all for such appre-hensions", he said.

He noted that SS5s, with the same range as the SS20, had been phased out. If America abandoned the December deployments Russia would dis-mantle its SS4s, of which there were more than 200.

M Pierre Mauroy, the French Prime Minister, called yester-day for the immediate forma-tion of a new United Nations force to patrol the "most sensitive zones" of Lebanon and ensure that UN resolutions are applied in full. He told Parliament that the

France has long advocated the creation of either a new UN force, which would eventually replace the present multinational force in Beirut, or the enlargement of the existing UN

Union Bill 'threat to hard left' By Our Labour Editor

New labour laws unveiled by the Government yesterday may make it more difficult for Communists to win power on the ruling bodies of trade The Trade Union Bill, given its first reading in Parliament, introduces compulsory secret ballots before strikes, for the election of union executives, and on the continuation of mion political funds. The Rill is much as predicted.

but it discloses an unexpected provision that is likely to work against the interest of the hard left. Clause two says that trade unionists must not be "unreaso-nably excluded" from standing for election to their union executive unless they belong to which are excluded by the rules of the union".

One thing missing from yesterday's Bill is payment of the political levy. Mr King repeated that he would prefer a make the big City firms employing many solicitors and earning large fees pay consider-ably more than they do at present, with corresponding reductions for the more modest mburban and provincial firms. The highly musual step of solding a ballot was forced on the society at a crowded special general meeting in London yesterday after several years of from one of the leading campaigners for change, Mr Starley Best.

A big majority of speakers favoured the change, but when it came to a vote the motion was eated by 225 to 170. That was because the large City firms jacked the meeting at the Law Sciety's headquarters in Chancely Lane; it was much easier for them to attend than for their provincial colleagues.

Mr Best, who comes from a two-partier practice in Torrington, bevon, was dissatispromptly outflanked his op-ponents, invoking a rule where-by a ballot of all members can be sought if a quarter of those present at a gr are unhappy with the outcome of a vote. At the root of many solici-

Penalties will not prevent councils breaking cash limits, survey concludes scheme for penalizing councils that our predicament arises will not stop them exceeding solely from the Government's next year's spending targets or curb rate rises.

That conclusion emerges from a preliminary survey of budgets by The Times, which discovered that many Conservative as well as Labour councils are planning to spend more than they have been allowed for 1984-85.

Councils blame the Government for likely rate rises next year. Tomorrow Lord Bellwin, Minister for Local Government, meets the first of a long line of angry Tory authorities.

This time it is Buckinghamshire, labelled as spendthrift and facing a rates increase next April of 24 per cent, which is to complain that Whitehall has made no allowance for the expanding population of Milto Keynes that has pushed up the cost of its services.

Mr Roger Parker-Jervis, the county council chairman, said that without a government penalty there need be no rates rise at all. "Our geat regret is failure to take account of our very rapid population growth."

The Government's targets have embarrassed even such loyally Tory counties as Kent and Surrey. Both are making efforts to cut their spending but are still likely to be spending more than their target.

In Tory suburban areas the situation is more acute. If Richmond upon Thames merely continues spending at its pre-sent level it would next year be 8.9 per cent above its limit, resulting in a huge penalty equivalent to adding 51.8 pence to the borough's rate.

In Bexley, an official said the Tory majority "has a long way to go to get down to target". In Waltham Forest, eoconomies of £5m are being sought in order to avoid harsh grant penalties, but the ruling Conservatives depend on Liberals for their majority and will find agree-ment on cuts difficult.

Labour has success at the polls

The Labour Party has won more votes than the Conservatives and the Alliance in local council by-elections held since the election of Mr Neil Kinnock as its new leader three weeks

The steep rise in the party's electoral popularity, which has been suggested by recent opinion polls, is strongly confirmed by a survey of the 21 three-cornered contests since October 2 in which nearly 50,000 votes have been cast.

The survey, which appears in this work's New Statesman, shows that the Labour Party has

Trade Union Bill

Secret ballot before strikes, or funds at risk

Part one of the Bill deals with trade union elections.

Clause 1 requires the executive to be elected by secret ballot of the union's members. The clause provides that every person who has a vote or casting vote on this committee must owe his position to an election fulfilling the requirements in clause 2 held within the last five years. The clause also provides that office holders in the union whose office gives them a vote or casting vote on the com-mittee (such as the union's general secretary or president) must have been similarly elected to that office.

Clause 2 lays down that all elections to the principal executive committee of a trade union must comply with the following requirements:

Travel firm pays £9,300 after hotel 'nightmare'

A winter skiing holida turned into a nightmare for two turned into a nightmare for two dozen dentists, doctors, and murses, Deputy Judge Sir Douglas Frank, QC, was told in the High Court yesterday.

Their stay in Italy went "disastrously wrong" when the 24 holidaymakers, who worked at the London Hospital, Whitechanel, were crammed into chapel, were crammed into seven rooms, their counsel, Mr James Wadsworth, QC, said.
The food advertised in the line food anvertised in the Blue Sky Holidays brochure with the words "Molto bene. We don't have to tell you how good Italian food is", was in fact "little short of appalling". Mr Wadsworth said.

Breakfast at the hotel, La Chapelle, at Jouvenceaux, on the French-Italian border, consisted of one cup of coffee and one croissant, with a rather rude reply if more food was asked for

There was no hot water, no adequate locks on the bedroom doors, no bar, and facilities in the hotel annex for guests to supply their own food or drink, Mr Wadsworth said.

The holidays who denied they were liable to pay back the £3,734 costs of the holiday in anuary, 1980. Later, after talks out of court, Blue Sky agreed to pay the holidaymakers £9,300, to include damages and legal costs. On that basis, the judg "stayed" the legal proceedings. The action was brought by Mr Anthony Clough, of Pickwick Avenue, Cheimsford, Es-sex, and Mr Andrew Palmer, now of Broomfield Hospital, Chelmsford, both dentists, who organized the trip.

Mr Wadsworth alleged that Blue Sky knew before the group left for Italy that the hotel manager had absconded with a arge sum of money, and had operated a fraud involving overbooking. As a result, rooms were not available.

Mr Wadsworth said holiday brochure promised that if the accommodation advertised could not be provided the money would be refunded or another comparable holiday offered.

Mr Clough, giving evidence, said the party arrived at the hotel amid chaos.

He and his wife shared a small room which contained four beds with a doctor and his wife. The following days were disastrous, Mr Clough said. At the start of the second week, he and his wife moved to the annex, to find it poorly lit, cold, and damp with a rough cement floor with cement h piled up, and bricks and timber lying around.

The heating was poor and their clothes became damp. Mr

Clough said he was once served a main course comprising "a little square of ham, a chunk of pineappie, and 11 peas".

Army acknowledges needs for journalism

The essence of successful warfare is secrecy and the recipe for successful journalism is publicity, but the two concepts need not be mutually and or the successful to the suc exclusive, according to the Army's top public relations official. "We acknowledge these imperatives exist, but we also acknowledge this gap has to be bridged", Brigadier Devid Ramsbotkam told journalists. Outlining his ideas about the treatment of war correspondents, he said that there was: No absolute right to know, but no absolute right to supress; an absolute right to ask questions, but an absolute right to refuse to answer provided a reason is terly criticized a report that war reporting involves a clash over press freedom. He said he had remonstrated with the defence correspondent of The Guardian for making the suggestion. "We are not at all concerned with a row over press freedom". He hoped that the exercise would camble journalists to see "the imperatives that operate on us in trying to protect the security of our operations and the people involved and why they are necessary".

The Ministry of Defence

believed an operational com-mander had the right to ask for protection of his operation and the people involved by controlling the time of release of operational information.

The Foreign Secretary spoke after Mr Denis Healey, chief Opposition spokesman on Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, had strongly attacked the conduct of President Reagan and of Mrs Thatcher whom he called the President's obedient poodle. Sir Geoffirey Howe said that remark was disgraceful. Mr Healey called on Mrs Thatcher to honour the obligation she had accepted with other EEC governments and warn the United States against the use of force to solve Central American force to solve Central American problems.

Mr Healey, in opening the debate, recalled that yesterday he had said the invasion of Grenada appeared to be a violation of the United Nations Charter and had split the Commonwealth countries of the Caribbean in two and raised the most fundamen-tal questions about relations between Britain and her most important ally. Everything which had happened in the past 24 hours confirmed the justice of what he had

It was improper for the House to condemn, as it had, the violation of international law by the Soviet Union in its attacks on Czechoslo-vakia and Afghanistan if it did not apply the same standards to the United States attack on Grenada.

He asked the Foreign Secretary to confirm that the government, in all its Commonwealth discussions, would stand for the principles of international law and would make its condemnation of the invasion.

its condemnation of the invasion plain for all to see.

He had to start, in referring to relations with the United States, by saying that information which had come to light in the past 24 homs made clear that statements made by the Foreign Secretary on Monday and Tuesday were imposfired.

The House would want to know how, in the light of this fact, the Foreign Secretary could tell them simply that there were reports that some parts of the smaller group of the Caribbean Commonwealth were seeking military support during the weekend. Even more, how could the Minister of State at the Foreign Office say explicitly in the House of Lords on Monday that no approach had been received from Commonwealth countries on this matter at the time she spoke.

The plain fact was that the Government was approached by the Organization of Eastern Caribbean Organization of Eastern Caribbean States on Friday and the Foreign Secretary had said that no formal invitation was extended until Monday evening. He could not say the Foreign Secretary was deceiving the House, but he was certainly misleading it in the words he used and it was impossible to justify, by any stretch of the meaning of words, the statement by the Minister of State in the Lords on Monday.

They now knew, from what was said in Washington, that the US began considering military invasion of Grenada since the military coup took place on October 13.

Reports on British television yesterday from Washington declared that the CIA had been planning such an operation for months, before the coup took place. Mr Bishop, over whose death the President had wept crocodile tears in his statement on Monday, expressed in an interview on British radio last August his concern about the imminence of an invasion of Grenada organized by the US.

The select committee examining the situation in the Caribbean 12 months ago warned the Government of these fears and the Foreign Office chose not to comment on this part of its report in the answer it offered the House last spring.

It is very difficult (he said) to resust the suspicion that the US organized the invitation from the CECS so as to justify its invasion. (Labour cheers). An American senator had said on the Today programme on the radio this morning that when the President told certain Congressmen of his intentions on Monday he also of his intentions on Monday he also told them that the UK Government was in full support of the policy he was describing to them. Mr Healey hoped that either the Senator misheard the President or the President was mistaken. It was important indeed that the Foreign Secretary should clear this up.

When looking at the history of the affair, not just of the last few days, but of the last 12 months when the independent Commonwealth state was widely discussed throughout the Caribbean and in many other parts of the world, they must conclude that the Government was guilty of the same sort of feeklessness as it chowned in dealing with the threat of showed in dealing with the threat of

Was it true that both the Prime Minister and the Palace first heard of the invasion from press reports?
Was it also true that a telex from the an invasion was delivered to an old Foeign Office number which now belonged to a Scandanavian plastics company? (Laughter) It was difficult to believe that imcompetence and tack of grit could go any further.

How on earth (he said) could the Prime Minister possibly imagine that a couple of minutes on the telephone with President Reagan when the invasion was already underway would make any difference? During that fraught couple of minutes, what did the Prime Minister say to the President and what did he say to her? I must confess my own imagination leads me rather in the direction of a dialogue between the Glums. (Laughter).

Making the point was not to be anti-American because it had been made with equal force by members of the American Congress. President Reagan had broken the post-war tradition of diplomacy of all governments in the United States since 1945, both Republican and Democratic, and he had abandoned reliance on cooperation and consen-sus with his allies in favour of what had come to be called a sort of global unilateralism.

One of the most worrying things the American President had said in recent days was that it was not possible to pick and chose where freedom could be defended. Could the United States really be expected to defend freedom on El Salvador and Guaternala by the same means he had used to defend it in Grenada?

There was also a danger he might there was also a danger or might chose the same menthod in defending in Nicaragus. America's allies had to disuade the United States from such a dangerous and estatembly course.

If the current events continued as now foreseen, the British Govern-ment must, as a minimum, refuse to accept the deployment of American missles on British soil unless Britain had the physical power to prevent their use against her will. Because what is happening in Greanda (he said) is a warning to the Prime Minister and to the Foreign Secretary in this particular The Opposition, and many on the Government benches, believed the American action to be the most catastrophic blunder and the failure of the Government to prevent it as an inforgivable dereliction of duty.

Something at least might be gained from the experience of the last few days. It should warn America's allies of the danger of servilling to leadership from servility to leadership from Washington which could be danger-ous to the interests of the western world. It should remind America's world. It should remind America's allies of the need to unite to shift American policy to the ways of cooperation and consensus.

Sir Geoffrey Howe, the Secretary of State for Foreign and Common-wealth Affairs; said he understood that the Americans had now secured both the sirports on the island at Pearls and Salines, as well as the radio station, and Fort Rupert. But was that there were no reports of any British casualties. The United States administration had informed Britain that they were willing to evacuate UK citizens to Bartudos as soon as conditions allowed. HMS Antrim remained ready to be called upon in case of need and Britain was also making contingency arrangements for evacuation by British aircraft.

The latest information available

He represented one of the few elements of constitutional continuity. The American adminis ration was aware of that constitutional position and had undertaken to respect it. Sir Geoffrey Howe recalled that the Prime Minister, Sir Eric Gairy, was overthrown in March 1979 in a coup d'etat and that a People's Revolutionary Government was set up, led by Dr Maurice Bishop, a Marxist, which suspended the

In a mini-budget intended to cut public spending by £500m, Sweden's Socialist Government vesterday raised taxes, cut food subsidies and froze foreign aid.

The last measure means that Sweden for the first time since 1975, will fall next year below its stated goal of giving 1 per cent of gross national product (GNP) in aid to the Third World. Aid will remain at roughly this year's level of £612m.

Mr Olof Palme, the Prime Minister, said the 1 per cent goal was unattainable because of Sweden's economic difficulties. Foreign aid was being financed by loans from abroad and any increase would endanger domestic reforms hitting the poorer sections of Swedish society. He pointed out that Sweden would still meet the United Nations aid goal of 0.5 per cent of GNP.

For the ordinary Swede, the mini-budget means an all-round ncrease in the cost of living. All basic foodstuffs, except for milk, will go up in price as subsidies are withdrawn. The price of a new car will rise on everage by £100 and there will be approximately 20p more on the cost of a bottle of wine and '69 at present costs £13.27 in the state off-licences). SOUTH AFRICA'S REFERENDUM Part 1

In the first of two articles on South Africa's biggest constitutional change since the Act of Union in 1910, Michael Hornsby, our Southern Africa correspondent, examines the new multi-racial structure which white South Africans will be asked to approve at a referendum on November 2.

The centrepiece of the new constitution, which would replace the existing Westminster parliamentary model with an elaborate presidential system, is a tri-cameral Parliament for the white, mixed-blood Coloured and Indian minorities. Together they account for just under 30 per cent of the total population of 29 million.

The remaining 70 per cent who are black - in apartheid parlance, a term applied only to Negroes - will continue to have look for their political fulfilment to the fragmented tribal "homelands", which Pretoria would have the outside world accept as separate states. 600 sail to safety from Vietnam

More than 600 Vietnamese refugees, many of them former military men and their families who had been planning their escape for more than four years, reached the Indonesian island for the UN High Commissioner for Refugees said yesterday.

The numbers have been going steadily down, M Labreveux said, with arrivals dropping from about 75,000 in 1980 to 45,000 in 1982 and between 22,000 and 23,000 this year.

Sources said that some 400 of the new arrivals had originally planned their escape from the southern city of My Tho on the Mekong Delta in 1979.

Kaunda seeks popularity vote in one-party poll

From Stephen Taylor Lucaka

Zambians go to polling booths across the country today either a soaring eagle or a scrowling frog. The outcome will reflect their five-yearly verdict on one of Africa's oldest independent administrations. The symbols, denoting "Yes" and "No" votes for President

Kenneth Kaunda, might seem unnecessary, as their is no other candidate for the presidency, But although Zambia's obstreperous Labour Movement has fallen into line recently, officials of the United Independence Party (Unip) – the sole legal political organization – are approaching the elections as a strious exercise in African

For one thing, their vote for President Kaunda will be an important barometer of his popularity at a time when there are restrictions on wage in-creases and when the cost of basic requirements is increasing at roughly 20 per cent a year. Secondly, the voters will also per cent of registered votes cast If today's turnout is low, it will be seen as a drop in the popularity of the President, who has ruled for 19 years.

The new Administration will probably continue to follow an economic policy sharply at variance with its professed socialist objectives and largely dictated by International Monctary Fund criteria attached to a one-year standby facility about $210m (£140m).

The IMF criteria won at least one crucial battle for President Kaunda in the run-up to the polling. Although initially faced with objections from the powerful Mine-workers' Union to 10 per cent wage increases, the administration won acceptance of a formula which is understood to stay within IMF

Despite calls by the Palestine boycott, the greatest number of lestinian Arabs in east Jerusalem turned out this week to vote in municipal elections since the former Arab sector was cap-tured in the 1967 war and later

According to figures issued yesterday, 12,000 Palestinians went to the polls - 20 per cent of the 60,000 in east Jerusalem qualified to vote. This turn-out was seen as indicating a change in Arab attitudes towards the election and was 50 per cent higher than in the last poll in 1978.

Political sources disclosed that the great majority of the Palestinians voted for Mr Teddy Kollek, aged 72, the Mayor of Jerusalem, who was returned by a sweeping majority for his fifth term in an office he Diplomatic abservers noted that the relatively high Arab turn-out came in the face of a well-organized boycott campaign, including slogans and a leading article in the Arabic-language paper Al Fajir which claimed that a Palestinian vote recognized and endorsed the unilateral unification of the city (by the Israelis)".

The expanations for the greater Arab willingness to vote included decline of the PLO in the wake of the Lebanon war and realization that Palestinians could expect a fairer deal from Mr Kollek than from his rival Likud Party.

The overall results through-out the country showed a slight swing to the main opposition Labour Party at the expense of Gonzalez compaigned under the slogan "A majority for change", a skilled and ambiguous slogan (no one presumably votes for unfavourable change) but with the advantage that it allows no one to complain afterwards that Gonzalez had promised the immediate application of socialism.

After the shock of the attempted coup d'état in February 1981, when he was led away from the debating chamber by paramilitary civil guards and made to pass an uncertain night with other Spanish political leaders, Gonzalez publicly declared that the 80s must be dedicated to establishing democracy soundly in Spain, and socialism would have to come later.

Naturally, his capacity for adaptation came under criticism within the party in earlier years, especially during 1979 when he dethroned marxism as

The middle classes (PSOE) was only legalized in February 1977 - the socialist team under living standards which were probably Gonzalez has been governing with too high for a still relatively poor European nation.

No scandal has yet sullied the Gonzalez administration and the image of honesty is one of the socialist's main assets with ordinary Spaniards after the pilfering of the state by the Franco regime and transitional government. The party, still with (less than 200,000 members, provides no militant challenge perhaps because so many cadres have been recruited for October's general election, four million national or local administrations, or perhaps because of the strong sense of unity which remains from police repression under Franco.

A new Spanish socialism needed a young and attractive figure completely dissociated from civil war hatreds and the failures of the party under the Second Republic. Gonzalez was an ideal figure for both the party apparatus and the media. But as his stature as a leader grew - he had become secretary-general of the then PSOE, then underground, in 1974 at the age of 32 - the accusations of opportunism died down.

Since taking office his personal prestige has been such that the rightwing opposition, led by Señor Manuel Fraga, the former Franco information minister, has sensed that public opinion would not respond to an attack on him; it has concentrated instead on ministers' allegedly unrealistic policies or inefficiency.

Señor Gonzalez: navigating the Spanish Ship of State on a difficult course

He has an undoubtedly populist facet, and admires the late Omar Torrijos of Panama. The off-quoted friendship with Herr Willy Brandt probably owed more to the former German Chancellor's identification with Felipe as his political heir than Herr Brandt's role as mentor. But especially in the early years, after the Spanish Socialist Party emerged from its clandestine existence in 1977, the influence of the German Social Democrats went very deep.

Indeed a German chancellorial style of governing would best describe the Gonzalez approach in his first year in office. He works with a personal team of about 65 advisers, a creation of the new administration modelled initially on the chancellor's office in Bonn.

As they waited for the centre democrat coalition to collapse, socialist leaders were appalled by the inability of prime minister Calvo Sotelo to control the administration, and by the handful of ill-prepared cronies with whom his predecessor Suarez struggled to run the country.

politicians – is an important aspect of Sefior Gonzalez's political personality. He has an undoubtedly populist facet, and detailed running of government equal to that of the prime ministers and cabinet meetings.

> In the selection of the team this has been a Gonzalez government right from the start. In the crucial field of economic policy, Gonzalez put in Señor Miguel Boyer, a 44-year-old professional economist and top-level bureaucrat as "superminister" group-ing three portfolios. Senor Boyer is a convinced social democrat who once tutored" Gonzalez, and who had introduced the future premier to Madrid's key banking and business

> Gonzalez' performance is unimaginable without Guerra, a workman's son from Seville, and the two men have what must be an almost unique political friendship. They that as students in Seville university in the 50s when Gonzalez, educated by Catholic priests and knowing of socialism only what a group of republican prisoners of war had told him, hesitated between left-wing Catholicism and socialism.

> Gonalez has enjoyed the good fortune of the loyalty of Guerra, whose equal to that of the prime ministers could easily fit hith to challenge Gonzalez. This loyalty is one of the basic reasons for the Gonzalez administration's unit, which contrasts with the chaotic jockeying for position which went on almost continuously under the Centre Democrats.

Cabinet ministers are now proud of this unity. They agreed to sack General Soteras, who publicly justified the 1981 coup bid, withing one hour - giving Spaniards the sense they strongly need of a government which really governs. Except over Spain's Nato membership. Guerra has not, as many had expected, publicly adopted more radical attitudes, confining hintself to pushing ideas inside the government team.

The peculiar circumstances of the rebirth of Spain's Socialist Party during the last decade of the Franco regime - with a nucleus in Seville with Guerra, attother in Madrid, and a third in the Basque country - help to explain Gonzalez. As one longstanding militant from these days recalled: There was no time for hobbies, you felt the task, which risked repression and the safety of colleagues was too important to say - 'I am sorry, I cannot do that, I sin asking my trance this evening to the cinema. The prime minister works out of a small palace in the Moncloa complex, on the northern outskirts of the capital. It was originally built by the Franco regime to receive foreign minsters but was subsequently allocated to the agriculture minstry - hence its nickname "Palace of the selected seeds". With Gonzalez, and far away from the ministries on the other side of Madrid, are the prime minister's secretariat, the team of advisers, and Senor Guerra's office. Gender gap

Much is being made in the United States these days of the so-called "gender gap". Apparently while 57 per cent of adult men in the US approved of President Reagan's performance in a survey carried out last year, only 39 per cent of women did. In Australia, the Labour Party's private polls supported that the large swine of summer to suggested that the large swing of support to Bob Hawke among women, and most dramatically young women, was decisive in

The gender gap has been a feature of British politics for many years, with considerably more women inclined to rote Conservative than are men. At the time of the February 1974 general election, the Conservative bias among women was 7 percent, as it was in October 1974.

Interestingly, it narrowed to 4 percent in both May 1979 and June 1983. About half of the gender gap in Britain is accounted for by age, what sociologists would describe as "cohort bias". In plain words this means that there is a tendency to become more conservative as one grows older, and to a substantial degree women live longer than men. There is also a tendency for older people to turn out to vote on election day, thus compounding the effect.

Only twice over the last 15, years have only twice over the last 13. years have more men said they would vote Conservative than women. The first was a year ago in May, at the time of the Falklands war. The other time was last December, at the first big flare of publicity surrounding the women's peace demonstrations at Green-

Further, Galling described in a pre-election report why the Literary Digest results were not truly reflective of a crosssection of voters.

The story comes from a book published today entitled Political Opinion Polling: An International Review. A compendium of contributions by senior pollsters in ten countries, the book chronicles the first faltering steps of polling in the US and France in the 1930s, Britain and Germany in the 1940s and Ireland in the 1970s. Anything but "Basin Street", anything but "The Saints". I name "Fine and Dandy" for no good reason. I haven't thought about it for 20 years. They go straight into it, Clarence Ford playing long supple lines on the clarinet, Alcorn's trumpet so far behind the beat you wonder if he'll ever get back and Adams's brass dancing easily along. Some of the crowd at the lobby cocktail bar listen, some don't even know the music is there. When a pretty waitress passes by, Ford blows a dirty note on the clarinet and winks.

It still seems an unlikely place to find jazz, until you realize that the hotels in New Orleans compete to buy the best jazz talent. The Hilton even has a floor named after the resident Pete Fountain has no very fond memories of those days. One-night stands, hotels, buses, fatigue and not much money. Not much chance to make himself heard either, which may be why he has gone to the other extreme and relapsed into a trio, with no piano, drums or guitar.

"Don't need them. I can hear them all in my head. Funny thing is, when I play with drums now they sound too loud. I have been playing with this trio here at the Marriott for six years and I really like it - we play for the ones that listen, and the ones that don't listen, that doesn't bother me. Got any more requests?" Some of These Days?"

OK," says Jerry. "We only played it three times already today. One more won't hurt any. And after that, seeing as you play bass, you can sit in for a couple of numbers".

Turgenev's Letters by A. V. Knowles (Athlone Press, £16)

The Collected Letters of Joseph

Vol 1: 1861-1897, edited by Frederick R. Karl and Laurence (Cambridge, £19.50) Marcel Proust

Selected Letters, 1880-1903

Not all the best letters are by professional imaginative writers. A case could be made for awarding a special prize for duliness to the letters of Walter Pater, which are of two equally tedious kinds: either "my sisters available is there and a measure and I would be most gratified if of superfluous bulk results from you could dine with us at the fact of having translations of Bradmore Road on Thursday, January 12th" or "Dear Miss Cratchett, I am most grateful for the delightful present of your 'Nymphs in Flight' which has politicians may be, since they help to explain other things we are interested in, their works.

These three books are more of less comparable in being the letters of three great heroes of the novel at its finest, well contained between the chronological extremes of Balzac and Thomas Mann. Turgenev's are much the best, but he has the advantage here of having a careful selection of 250 presented from a total of more than six thousand. A. V. Knowles puts in some items for merely representative purposes, to reveal Turgenev as absentee: landowner or as author dealing with publishers and editors. But for the most part he is in full human flow and a marvellous, Slavon ness it achieves. The Conrad collection is entirely unselective. Everything all the letters he wrote in French printed with the same spacious-ness as their originals. The Proust is a selection again, one of the same size as Turgenev's

Conrad's letters, those of his first forty years at least, make a less engrossing impact. They emphasise his fastidious sense of honour and, through the absence of those little discrepancies between one letter and another so common to collections of this kind, his right to that fastidiousness. The political storms and family tragedies of his early years left him with an intense sensitivity, not only to afflictions of the soul — principally the difficulties of writing and the possibility of failure as a writer — but also of failure as a writer - but also of Jewish mother, he responds the body, souvenirs of his admirably to an anti-Semitic eastern voyages. As an official biographer, with access to the private papers (including those diaries about which Monty used to be as coy and titillating as Lord Reith about his) and as a friend to whom his subject showed much kindness Mr Hamilton is naturally positive. He writes with passion, and the sad fact is that it is a passion which too often sweeps him away. The many merits of this, as of his first volume, are shrouded by the fact that at 860 pages it is disproportionately long. Never become a bore is a good principle for a hiographer. Mr Hamilton's habit of printing in full contemporary documents which could have been summarised or reproduced in an appendix, or referred to under a file number, certainly does not add to the gaiety of nations.

For so many years now the opposing factions have issued books, fighting backwards and forwards over the old battlegrounds. Yet when we consider the matter we find that in regard to large parts of Montgomery's generalship even those, like myself, who rate him in the highest class readily admit to many failings. Lifestyle and the ivory tower

The Style of the Century, 1900-1980

By Bevis Hillier

(The Herbert Press, £12.50) Bevis Hillier is our foremost expert on what he (and we) can only, with a slight grimace and occasional apologetic quotation marks, call "lifestyle" - twenti-eth-century lifestyle specifically. It is not exactly sociology, not exactly art history, not exactly small-scale industrial archeology, but somewhere in the middle. Its visible signs can best be described by another cant-word of the moment collectibles. And its watchwords are nostalgia and camp.

Or in the hands of a hundred less perceptive and scholarly commentors they would be. As we already know from Austerity/Binge, his pioneering study of the decorative arts in

In his new book he applies the method of Austerity/Binge to the century so far, and we can guess what we are in for from a quick glance at the jacket, which Bradley, Patton . . . And after considering in detail their true military abilities tried to undereatures a resplendent Forties ukebox (converted, we are told, from 78s to 45s), a Tiffany lamp, a Marilyn Monroe teestand Montgomery's feelings at being supplanted by his pro-fessional inferiors. But perhaps shirt and a superrealistic model displaying an implacably moulded and waved hair-style of 1937. All of which might qualify as unconsidered trifles (even, up to surprisingly recently, the Tiffany lamp) until Mr Hillier turned his attention to them. He is interested in the function of these things. But he is also interested in seeing them ing their stylistic characteristics, and relating popular, unedu-cated taste to what was going on in fine art and high fashion at the same time.

There is an extremely sedate and buttoned-up piece on John Stewart Collis by Richard Ingrams, and Auberon Waugh is almost as sober in his account of Douglas Woodruff, John Carey contributes a fine just one way. But Mr Hillier shows us that it never was entirely like that: the unsophisticated arts of the twentiethcentury do not merely steal notions from their creative superiors, but lead an unsuspected life of their own. And this impinged willy-nilly on even the loftiest artists, who could hardly, even if they would, have dwelt exclusively in an ivory

(Faber, £7.50) The tug of love linked to death lies deep in the soul of German Romanticism. And Moravia's choice of the title-date suggests a political resonance beyond the central erotic tension that compels the narrator to pursue the (deeply) obscure object of his desire. But Moravia has deliberately abandoned the detailed local solidity of novels (like The Conformist) set in a similar period. From the moment Moravia's Durer's etching of Melancolia, and asks himself whether it is possible to live in despair without desiring death, he meets the eyes of a young

At first sight only an exotic strand in the book, her story offers an enigmatic insight into Moravia's own involvement. The woman describes herself as "already dead"; and can even put a date on her death. In her account, we begin to perceive deeper reality in the death of the spirit than in any erotic same. and as she describes her lover's political treachery and political idealism as alternate and which he must have confronted every day in the mirror, we begin to understand the rel-evance of doubles to the context

At the heart of the Quartet lay a complex understanding of religious and political factions in the Middle East. At the heart of this sequence we heve a gnostic sect which has a wan hope of reversing the second law of thermodynamics by the supreme commitment of whenever an elite group prepared to renounce love, as voluntary death called upon to do so. Seen even in spiritual terms, in the context of a world which is just post-war, and has so recently learnt of mass murders of many innocents, it is hard to believe the deaths of any group

If it lacks excitement - and it does then I can readily imagine her claiming that as a virtue. It does not lack feeling and intelligence. The work in her Selected Poems (Oxford University Press, £7.95) presents a record of solid achievement, and it is good to note a certain progress underlying it. On the technical level this could be described as a movement away from strict classical forms in search of something that will approximate to the twists and turns of common speech. This development seems mostly inspired by the poet's awareness that she now has, quite simply, more to say than when she began, so that it is no accident that the newer

There is one poem which I always look for, as a test or touchstone, in anthologies of this kind; it is by Drayton, and Grigson includes it, and I will quote the opening lines as a sort of answer to Flear lines as a sort of answer to Fleur Adcock, or at least an antidote

Havana: Richard Williams watches Castro's TV speech on Grenada

'A battle for the small nations'

In driving rain which had lasted more than 24 hours, crowds of Cubans gathered yesterday to hear speeches applauding and reinforcing Fidel Castro's message on television and radio on Tuesday night in which he described the US invasion of Grenada as "an enormous political Sheltering under umbrellas or with coats over their heads, a particularly large crowd gathered on the steps of the Raul Capero Bonilla pre-university institute in Havana. În the Plaza Roja de la Vibora, marching students and schoolchildren in uniform red neckerchiefs and white shirts converged with banners and songs. Similar meetings were held all over Cuba.

In the bar of the Havana Riviera Hotel, built during the last years of the Batista era with distinctly prerevolutionary pastimes in mind, holidaymakers halted their drinking and waiters ceased their ministrations late on Tuesday when Castro began his televised press conference.

Outside, the seafront boulevard was deserted even of its thin flow of Polish saloons, Russian lorries, Czech motor-cycles and vast chromium-encrusted American relics of the 1950s as, in the course of his hour-long speech, Castro described the sequence of events which led to the fighting, reading out the texts of messages which had passed between

Castro also gave precise details of the Cubans on Grenada at the time of the attack. "There is no secret about this," he said, listing 550 construction workers, "not more than 40" military advisers, and "agricultural technicians" in a total

"The proof that they were workers," he said, "is in the excellent surport they have built in such a short period - good enough, in fact, for the US planes to land on it even before it is finished." He had instructed the workers to fight "to the last man" and to "create the conditions for prolonged resistance to occupation" even though they were armed only with rifles and fewer than 300 rounds of ammunition each. These arms, he said, had been allocated to them by Bishop for self-defence. In a message last Saturday, Castro had told the Cubans in Grenada to adopt and fortify defensive pos-itions, and that their duty was "to die fighting, no matter how difficult and dangerous the conditions may

He described how, following Bishop's death, Cuba's relations with the new government had been "cool" but he had hoped that "by a miracle of wisdom and serenity they might have improved.

On Saturday he had also sent a message to Washington denying any intention to interfere in Grenada's internal affairs, expressing concern for the welfare of the US citizens on the island and suggesting that "it is convenient to keep in touch on this matter so as to avoid violence. At 5pm yesterday, after 10 hours of fighting, he had received a message from the US regretting the armed clashes, which had been due to "misunderstandings". At 8.30pm he replied: "We did our best to prevent the intervention, which is totally unjustifiable."

The Cubans, he said, were still holding on with bravery and staunchness in "a battle for the small nations of the world." He added: "Any attempt to continue the fighting tomorrow and gain a military victory will lead to a disastrous moral defeat."

Castro concluded: "Eternal glory to the Cubans who have died and to those still fighting. Patria o muerte. Venceramos." Around the bar there was at first a smattering of applause, then louder and prolonged. As it died, there was satisfied laughter: the Cubans clearly felt that Castro had put up the expected parformance, projecting beliefs they share.

New York: Trevor Fishlock on a new assault on President Reagan's foreign policy

'Shocking ignorance of past experience'

foreign policy, Mr George Ball, Under-Secretary of State for five years in the 1960s, has accused President Reagan and his advisers of narrow-minded and ill-educated responses to events overseas and of having learnt nothing from history.

He accused the Administration of allowing the country to be sucked into damaging and dangerous political morasses, such as Lebanou, with no clear idea of what it is trying to do. He accused Mr Reagan of "impulsive heroics" and of seeking to oversimplify every foreign prob-lem as an East-West conflict.

"I can think of nothing more dangerous and irresponsible than to try to force every local conflict into

Mr Ball's strictures crystallize the growing anxiety felt by many Americans after the weekend mass acres in Beirut and the invasion of

We have become a nation unfamiliar with, and almost disdainful of, its own past", Mr Ball told foreign journalists in New York. "We confer positions of high responsibility on individuals who have not merely had no experience, but who tend to oversimplify history without having read it.

"Were our institutional memory not so enfeebled, our leaders would recognize that doctrine is no substitute for the wisdom yielded by experience. In the past few years we

Mr Ball said that had the Reagan administration learnt history's lessons it would not be trying to overthrow the Nicaraguan govern-ment. Previous attempts to overthrow Latin American governments had usually left the people worse off. In 1927, he said, President Coolidge sent marines to save. Nicaragua from bolshevism imported from Mexico, the bogyman of the time. The result was the Somoza dictatorship which tyrannized the people for 43 years. In 1954, the CIA destabilized the Guatemalan government, leaving a legacy of brutal right-wing regimes. In 1961, the failure of the ignominious Bay of Pigs operation streng-thened Castro's hold on Cuba.

has brought our Latin American neighbours the blessings of democracy. We have simply secured the iron hold of squalid dictatorships.
"A great power should think hard before deploying forces anywhere in the world; but once it makes the mistake of committing them in an untenable situation it should never be deterred from cutting its losses by exaggerated concern for symbols such as prestige and credibility. "Lebanon is far more dangerous than Vietnam. Not only does it lie within a short distance of the Soviet Union, but 7,000 Soviet troops are within 50 miles of our marines. The Administration has only a vague concept of what the marines are supposed to do. The stakes are distressingly high."

Writers of the land, unite

Two hundred years ago novels were hardly respectable. Nor were their publishers. To invent depravity - for what are novels but accounts of one kind of depravity or another? - was surely a calculated insult to the munificence of the Prime Creator a blasphemy. Novels were seen to weaken the mind and the aesthetic sensibility, and to sap the morals of young women, always very tender. But it is not philosophers we look to now to explain the nature of our reality, nor to the church to tell us how to behave. We look to our novelists to explain it all away. Writers, once subversive, are now seen to carry the weight of the establishment upon their shoulders.

The Booker Prize goes to a work of literature. It does not go to the "best" novel written in any one year. nor can the other five shortlisted be said to be the five next-best. How could this be, unless by happy accident? Writers may be geniuses, but judges are not.

And so the prize is given, and here we are. There are 120 people at this dinner. Of these, perhaps 20 or 30 are writers - six shortlisted authors. three writer judges, and a handful of others who double as critics, publishers, agents and so forth. Writers know well enough that they are like Atlas, bearing on their shoulders all those who depend upon them for their income, the exercise of their own skills, their status and their very jobs. Pubbooksellers, editors, lishers. librarians, journalists, academics, festival organizers, arts councils, would be nothing without writers. So, to the publishers I would say this. We are the raw material of your trade. You do tend to forget it, you know. You use us, the living us, and quite frankly you don't look after your raw material very well. And as you turn into an industry, so we must turn into workers and organize. I think you'd do without us altogether if you could, if there was a way of producing a book without writers - people who can never be trusted to produce a product of consistent quality.

In a speech last night at the Booker Prize award ceremony, the novelist and short story writer Fay Weldon bitterly attacked Britain's publishers for their outmoded attitude to the source of their livelihood answer back. I am now going to ask some awkward questions. I am going to ask you why you will not negotiate with the writers who wish to negotiate with you?

I will ask you if in your dealing with authors you really are being fair, honourable, and right, or merely getting away with what you can? Whether the "custom and practice" you quote as a reason for his and that, in an industry changed beyond all recognition since these customs and practices arose, can really go on as they are. If you are not careful, you will kill the goose that lays your golden eggs.

I will tell you what the writers dislike. The writer dislikes your paternalism. It is rivalled only, perhaps, by BBC Radio, which has a world monopoly in radio plays; but even they are learning. The writer dislikes the way you say: "Aren't you lucky, we're going to publish your book - actually publish your book! What a risk we're taking how very, very lucky you are, and honoured! Just sign this, please, you don't need an agent. Custom and practice!" It is wearing very thin.

The writer dislikes the rise of the editor. The editor is, of course, very often the writer's best friend. That is the trouble. The new young writer that increasingly elusive creature -writes for the editor, not the readers. The reader seems so far, so long away - on the other side of months and years, with a mountain range of publishers, designers and production people in between.

So the writer writes half-finished novels and says: What do you think, what shall I do? And the editors say, because that's what they are employed to do: Why, develop this character, or draw that one back, or change the end, or set it in Cardiff, not Belfast - no-one's buying Belfast any more, and anyway the Weish market's still untapped.

The writer dislikes the way you underpay your editors, and your designers, and your production people.

We know there are graduates queueing up at your door for jobs in publishing, and we know they have first class degrees in English Literature. So why should you bother to pay them more? They may be queueing, but they're not queueing for the right reason. They just want jobs. They don't love

The ones you want toss up; heads a life of dignified poverty in publishing tails, an exciting and well-paid job in television or journalism. The coin comes down tails of course it does. They make sure it does. And that 's where your new young editors are. Somewhere else, like the writers.

We wonder why the publishers apart from one or two magnificent people - did not help us, the writers to get Public Lending Right. They helped, en masse, in other countries. was so evidently fair that we should have it.

We find it extraordinary that you demand to lease the copyright of what comes out of our heads, not just while we're living but after we're dead - 50 years after we are dead. Why? There is no sense in it, or justice, only custom and practice. We lease our work in other fields for a period of years - only two years in television - and the proportion of capital to reward invested is higher there than it is in publishing.

Well, reading takes longer than viewing. As things are, a novel which I write when I am 20 can still make money for you when I am 90, when I am getting not a penny. We will give 10 years - 10 years of your business, 10 years of our lives.

I do not want to end this on a sour note. But the Booker Prize is a serious event and a serious occasion. and we must take literature seriously, and put its house in order. I know enough of the temperament and character of most - not all - of the authors here tonight to believe that what I say will find sympathy with them. Writers and publishers inhabit the same world, share the same beliefs, and have the same ambitions - part worldly, part literary. It is important that some real reconciliation between us is accomplished, and soon. Your writers, I can tell you, are in a fair old state of indignation.

The Writers' Guild, which will soon be linking with the Society of Authors and the Theatre Writers' Guild – for these days a writer increasingly is a writer, is writer, is a writer and can move easily among the various media - is anxious to achieve this reconciliation. We hope your Publishers Association will do the same, and may even link for mutual advantage, with the Book-sellers Association. In the meantime we, the writers, will gladly go on writing novels for you, and even judging them, ...

deputy to Mr Hattersley in the Labour leadership, the pressures on him to force Labour forward on the road to the left would have been hard to resist. But will they be so irresistible now that he is leader?

The history of Labour leaders is of men who (with one significant exception) rose to influence as spokesmen of the left, and then, faced in power with the unpleasant reality of what the policies of the left would entail, retreated from them (again with a single exception).

The Labour leader who had never been a candidate of the left was Hugh Gaitskell, and his attempt to free his party from socialism (by which I mean steadily increasing state ownership of everything that matters) and to eradicate its tendency to disengage from the Western defence system brought him under constant attack.

Mr Callaghan's short-lived leadership could, perhaps, be cited as another example, but it was bequesthed him in the exceptional circumstances of Sir Harold Wilson's abrupt resignation from office. (Every other Labour leader has been elected when the party was in

Other Labour leaders have been chosen either as candidates of the left or when the left was in the ascendant. That was true of Macdonald and Lansbury. It was even true of Attlee, who emerged as leader of the post-1931 Labour rump when moderation was out of fashion. These were the Popular. Front years when the question was freely discussed what special powers a Labour government should take to ensure that it could bring in a socialist state. Though Attice did not agree with his colleague Stafford Cripps about the possibility of working with communism, there is no reason to think that he dissented much from the ethos of the Left Book Club years.

What is more, Attlee's post-war government was more socialist than any other Labour government, since it achieved extensive nationalization. and the state management of collective welfare provisions. It did more to establish the authority of the state than any other government in our history, and in that sense Attlee was a Labour leader who did not retreat much from earlier

But that was not necessary. For one thing the 1945 government was building on a wholly non-socialist society and would still leave a very large private sector behind it. The grievances of the time, the size of the majority and the fact that the industries taken over were large and basic also made the task easier.

Harold Wilson also came to power with the credentials of a former candidate of the left. He had stood successfully against Gairskell for the leadership on the grounds that party conference decisions should be respected (in the aftermath of Gairskell's resistance to his conference defeat over unitateral disarmament) though Wilson was not himself a unilateralist. In his

But as we know, he spent his time

If Mr Neil Kinnock had become in office fighting off the left on international and national policy. He tried to make Britain a social democratic country fit for people like Roy Jenkins to live in, though in the end the left was too much for him. Even Mr Foot, after years of ranting, tried to leave room in the party for the moderates. So what about the left's latest leader, Mr Neil Kinnock? He too shows signs of nervousness about the galloping horses from the left which have dragged him to office so early in life.

and the second

The moderates therefore hope that they have a leader in the old tradition who will use his bona fides with the left to make the party dilute its leftist commitments.

In 1945, Attlee replied to Churchill's emphasis on the rights of the individual and the danger of being ordered about by officials with a graphic picture of the time when employers were free to work little children for 16 hours a day", when women were exploited through sweated labour, and "when people were free to neglect sanitation so that thousands died of preventable diseases." For years, he said, remedies were blocked on the plea of freedom for the individual, and it was only through the power of the state, given to it by Parliament, that the public has been protected against the greed of ruthless profit-makers and property owners".

What Attlee did not say was that these remedies had been applied in pre-socialist days and by non-socialist means. In was not, even in 1945, inevitable that what remained to be done must be done by socialism. There is an essential difference between the duty of the state to lay down rules to secure the basic welfare of all (and to protect the liberty of the poor from that of the rich) and a socialist society in which the state does the job itself (as it needs to do only in such limited areas as defence and the police).

To talk of individual liberty and equality as though each precludes the other, simply because they would do so if pursued to logical absurdity, is foolish. Both concepts are necessary for a free society, and their relationship can be seen in the state's need to regulate free markets, without which markets would not for long remain free.

The case against socialism is not that it seeks the welfare of all but that it does so by giving great power to the state and its officials, who are as corruptible by the richness of power as a millionaire is by material wealth. The petty official, with his little brief ambority, may find it as hard to pass through the eye of a needle as a magnate. That is the problem of socialisms.

Its consequences are seen not only in Marxist countries where the state determines all things, but in those areas of our own society where its rule is insufficiently challenged.

Under socialism, most decisions are taken by small activist groups on the majority's behalf, not by the majority itself collectively or individually. That is why it is unpopu-Br. The curious thing is that Labour pre-leadership years. Sir Harold's leaders themselves in practice have solidly in the Benn-Foot-Kinnock and retreated from the very rhotoric by which they rose. Will Mr Kinnock?

Everything you say will be taken in briefcase or pocket what the office equipment trade calls a microcassette recorder, a gadget smaller than a slim paperback that will pick up and record everything the journalist might say, and everything said to him. The better sort switch on only when there is something to record. I bought my own version of this instrument after an encounter in a pub with a bishop. It was the only place I could find to interview him. He had some interesting things to say, but more to the point, an interesting way of saying them. When I returned to the office and addressed the typewriter, I could easily remember the gist, but found his exact words had been lost from

As I wrote a second-best piece, lacking the distinctive colour of his American turn of phrase, it occurred to me how much easier life would be with a miniature tape-recorder. Having such a thing now, however, has solved one problem only to raise another is it ethical?

How, for instance, would that American bishop feel if he subsequently discovered I had bugged our entire conversation? Or, had I taken it out and placed it on the bar alongside our half pints, would he have dried up almost completely, choosing his words with the care of a man being interviewed live on the radio?

One recalls the occasion during the election campaign when a local newspaper reporter had talked to Michael Foot's wife and reported her as saying that Foot would retire soon after the election. There was a fuss about whether she had really said it. A micro-casette recorder surrepticiously switched on in time would have put the matter beyond dispute. But would it have been fair?

.There are those who hold that all is fair in love, war, and journalism; they would no doubt argue that a tape-recorder is nothing more than a superior version of the reporter's own memory, giving him the total and exact recall that some biessed individuals already appear to pos-sess. I don't believe most interviewees would see it quite like that In their shoes, I would feel tricked.

It is not easy to say why, however, without exploring the relationship

For a modest outlay, today's between the journalist and the Complete Journalist can have in his people he deals with. Many aspects of this relationship are left undefined. People make throw-away remarks, and say "Don't quote me". They lean forward and say, "Don": say who told you, but . . ".

Asides and confidences and small indiscretions, all grist to the journalist's mill if he knows how to andle them, are not quite the same if they are all on tape. It seems as if the professional relationship has been somehow disturbed by this electronic eavesdropper, even if no one but the journalist will ever hear the tape played through. "Between you, me, and the gate-post" is never quite the same as "between you, me, the gate-post, and the ministure tape-recorder in your briefcase."

There appears to be a moral relationship parallel to the professional one whenever a journalist talks to a source, and one which is far more subtle than the need to protect the source's identity. Whatever the nature of this moral relationship, it seems that a taperecorder necessarily stands outside it, unless deliberately brought in. But to say "I think you ought to know that everything you say is being recorded" is the perfect formula for inducing total reticence. There are situations where undisclosed recording would seem justified. Press conferences present no problems, for even those giving them often tape the whole proceedings. It would not be unfair to record the remarks of an eye-witness of a bank robbery, when only the most casual and temporary professional relationship exists between the journalist and the source: both are, m a sense, anonymous and depersonalized participants, with no moral obligations to each other.

Crooks and conmen are perhaps fair game. The tape may be an important part of the evidence against them. Outside these clear categories, however, the lines are much harder to draw.

I have a tape-recording of the Archbishop of Canterbury chatting to me, made when the temptation to switch on my new gadget on every occasion was almost irresistible. He did not know he was being recorded, but I am sure he will forgive me. He said mathing in maticular in fact said nothing in particular, in fact most of the sound is of two pairs of footsteps. But was it wrong of me? I am almost inclined to think it was. P.O. Box 7, 200 Gray's Inn Road; London WCIX 8EZ. Telephone: 01-837 1234

WHEN FRIENDS FALL OUT

The Government emerges bat-tered but not seriously discredited credited from yesterday's Commons debate on Grenada. from There is no reason, on the evidence so far, to doubt the Foreign Secretary's account of the events leading up to the invasion. According to this the British Government were not told of Mr Reagan's decision until Monday evening - that is, until after Sir Geoffrey's state-ment to the House. Before that an appeal for help from the Caribbean states appears to have gone astray, as did a message from Grenada. Sir Geoffrey is therefore absolved of any suspicion that he lied to the House. On the other hand, as Mr Julian Amery suggested, he was more bland and uninformative than he should have been in view of the amount of information that was available to him at that time on . the discussions leading up to the invasion. He was aware that the appeal was on its way, even if it had not arrived. He would have done better to be somewhat more frank with the House

Was he misled by Washington? According to his own account, the Caribbean appeal eventually reached London on Monday evening. There were then two conversations with President Reagan. In the first, the President said he was giving serious consideration to the appeal. In the second he said he had decided to respond posi-tively. After midnight Mrs Thatcher again reiterated her misgivings. The question, therefore, is whether President Reagan was being frank in the first conversation. In the House yesterday, Sir Geoffrey would not be drawn into saying more than that the consultations were regrettably less than he would have wished. Thus the picture presented by. the Government is of an honest disagreement between two allies, each supported by different states in the Caribbean. Britain refused to participate but the United States then proceeded with actions which it deemed necessary for its own security and that of its citizens in the area. There is no disgrace to the British Government in this, and it was absurd of Mr Healey to exploit this issue to accuse Mrs Thatcher of being Mr Reagan's poodle. She put up all the resistance that was feasible in the circumstances, at any rate short of making a public issue of it over the weekend.

It is also wrong to insist that Britain should vote against the United States at the United Nations. Britain's disagreement has been made clear in word and deed. Her aim must now be to reduce the damage to the alliance. Much depends, of course, on the wording of the resolution. There would certainly be no point in supporting a resolution calling for the immediate withdrawal of foreign troops from Grenada. Now that the Americans are there the besthope must be that they succeed in getting a constitutional government elected as soon as possible. Withdrawal would make this more difficult.

Nevertheless, damage has been done to the alliance. This is not to say that the United States was obliged to follow British advice. Any government is first of all responsible for the security of its own people. In principle the United States is perfectly entitled to act on its own if it believes its own security to be threatened, just as a British Government would also ignore American advice if they felt their responsibility to their own people demanded this. The fact that in this case Washington's perception of its interests was. probably wrong does not affect the principle.

However, national security can seldom be treated in total states in the Caribbean. Britain isolation. Disagreements over be redout made its objections plain and military action in the nuclear age. Atlantic.

can be extremely dangerous. It is therefore not irrelevant to bring in discussion of nuclear weapons in Europe. There are two dangers that could arise from disagreement over their use. One is that the Americans would not fire them even if urged to do so by Europeans for fear of inviting retaliation against the United States. This is one of the reasons for Britain to maintain its own nuclear deterrent. The other danger is that the United States might fire them against the wishes of the host country. As Sir Geoffrey Howe pointed out, this danger is catered for in political agreements that are supposed to preclude such a possibility. So far there is no reason to imagine that political relations could deteriorate to such an extent that these agreements would be ignored, so a dual key system is not strictly necessary on the

"Grenada" principle.

Mutual security depends not on specific agreements or dual keys but on achieving a sufficient degree of general agreement on the major issues of the day. Unfortunately - and dangerously - there is now less agreement in the Atlantic alliance than there ought to be. This is not strictly an Atlantic problem. Though Mr Reagan's view of the world is not fully shared in most of Europe, it is also widely contested in the United States, where he gets a low rating in the opinion polls for his handling of foreign affairs. Lack of consensus in the alliance is therefore aggravated by lack of consensus in Washington. The disagreement over Grenada has shown this up. It is probably survivable because Grenada is small and with luck and skill the crisis will not last long - though even this is not certain. But the disagreement must be seen as a warning that efforts to bridge the broader differences in the alliance must be redoubled on both sides of the March 1979, the month of its demise. In a Green Paper it recommended a code of conduct on openness. Unlike the members of the FDA's machinery of government sub-committee, Mr Callaghan's ministers and officials had not thought it through or fleshed out the details. Their prime intent was to head off Mr Clement Freud's private member's bill, which also died when Mr Callaghan lost his vote of confidence. On becoming Prime Minister Mrs Thatcher would have none of it. A second term and a 144-seat majority have not > thawed her resolve. Yet the Prime Minister and the Cabinet Secretary would be advised to ponder carefully the FDA's prescription. It shows them a patch of high ground that could be defended against the zealots of freedom of information. The foxhole they currently occupy is defensive in intent but offers no genuine protection. It offers the worst of all worlds. Whitehall's battery of confidentiality codes, conventions and statutes accumulated since 1250 amount to a leakers' charter. Through their ludricrous over-extension, which brings them into disrepute, they do not assist the maintenance of confidentiality even in those areas where it is justified. They put the Government continually on the defensive, making it furtive where it should be forthcoming. It is fearfal of the people who elected it with a thumping majority. If Mrs Thatcher fails to consider moving from her dangerous foxhole on to the safer high ground, everyone will be the loser - the public, Parliament, civil servants and the Cabinet. Local government

From Professor Bryan Keith-Lucas Sir, In the course of the present disagreement between central and local government the Secretary of State for the Environment recently gave a talk on local government history to a group of councillors and chief officers.

In his speech he referred to the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1834 and the Municipal Corporations Act of 1835, saying that "the fundamental element of these legislative reforms was that Parliament created statutory authorities with prescribed powers but with no power to act outside those powers."

This is a new interpretation of history. The Municipal Corporations Act did not create a single new statutory authority: it reorganized the existing corporations, all created by royal charter, some of them dating from before the creation of Parliament. As such it has been held by a series of decisions in the courts that they were not limited by the doctrines of ultra vires, but were free to do whatever was not expressly prohibited by Parliament. the doctrine of ultra vires was Wye, evolved by the courts, not by Ashford, Kent.

The second secon

Parliament, in relation to statutory, not chartered, corporations.

He also announced that "there can be no room in our unitary state for unilateral declarations of inde-pendence by individual local auth-orities". No local authority has made such a declaration; they have only claimed the right, within the law, to do what they think right for their people, as distinct from what the central ministries think right.

the central ministries think right.

Mr Jenkin also referred to the Revolution Settlement of 1688. He might ponder the lesson of the events that led to that settlement. What finally forced James II to abdicate and go on his travels was his ill-advised attempt, abetted by Judge Jeffreys, to force the borough corporations to surrender their ancient charters, and to do as they ancient charters, and to do as they were told by central government.

In the days of Queen Victoria the existence of a democratic and independent system of local selfgovernment in the towns, counties and villages of England was one of our proudest boasts. There is some ment in such Victorian values. Yours faithfully,

From the President of the British Sociological Association

Sir, In his comments on courses at the Polytechnic of North London (October 14), Mr Terence Miller has implied that a great many sociologists, "particularly in the British Sociological Association", assess students' work in terms of its adherence to, or departure from, the Marxist "party line". He provides no evidence to support such a sweeping allegation, one which is a gratuitous insult to all members of this association, whether or not they hold one of a number of intellectual positions which could be identified as Marxist" . .

It is difficult to know how he could have such evidence. Indeed, as our register of members indicates, their interests and publications range over a wide variety of theoretical perspectives.

In the absence of evidence his letter, and its publication, can at best be regarded as highly unfortunate. Yours faithfully, R. K. BROWN, President British Sociological Association, 10 Portugal Street, WC2. October 20.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Outlawing the terror weapon

From Canon George Austin From Canon George Ausur.

Sir, The horrifying massacre of so many young men of the peacekeeping forces in Beirut, more appalling only in the numbers involved than today's report (October 24) of a little girl's death in a grenade attack by Basque separatists, is yet one more act of terror in a fearful catalogue of violence to which new atrocities are violence to which new atrocities are added daily, by government forces of left and right as well as by factional groups who will be called revolutionary patriots, freedom fighters, or terrorists according to one's own support for or aversion to the cause they seek to promote.

Is there no end to the escalation of the use of the weapon of terror against often unarmed men, women and children in the furtherance of a political cause? It is exactly 40 years ago that Bishop George Bell, writing in his diocesan newsletter, attacked the terror-bombing of cities and civilians as "a wrong deed, whether done by the Nazis or ourselves".

Two years previously, he had called for the British and German governments to make solemn declarations that both would refrain from the night bombing of cities, as a limitation which would "make a halt in the world's rushing down to ever-deeper baseness and con-fusion" (in a letter to The Times on April 17, 1941).

In the face of the growing use of the weapon of terror in our own day Church leaders have been quick to condemn the actions of those whose cause they deplore while seeming to condone by their silence (or their excuses) the same acts of terror committed in support of a cause for which they have sympathy, a unilateralism which defeats moral principle by making the end more important than the means.

Experience of ecclesiastical vacillation in this makes it only a vain hope that Pope, archbishops, leaders of the great confessional families of the world, could combine to proclaim the moral principle which might bring the world back from the baseness and confusion" to which it has undoubtedly sunk.

With the United Nations an even more unreliable source for moral leadership, is it not time for presidents and prime ministers of the greater nations of the world not only to outlaw the weapon of terror against unarmed civilians but also against unarmed civilians our asso-those many groups who use it to further their ends (regardless of the justice of their cause) as well as the nations who give them support and sanctuary, before the cancer spreads further and mankind destroys its own humanity?

Yours faithfully GEORGE AUSTIN, The Vicarage, 19 High Road, Bushey Heath, Variond Hertfordshire. October 24.

Pension arrangements From Mr Martin Paterson

Sir, In the current lobbying for individualized pension arrange-ments, for whatever reason, there seems to be a persistent lack of understanding of the fact that a final salary scheme is a form of insurance relying on a pooled fund to meet its commitments and backed by the employer. Therefore you cannot reasonably expect an employer, or for that matter the fund's trustees, to agree to administer a final salary scheme and at the same time divide amongst the members the assets needed to underwrite it. · It is necessary to choose between one system or the other and, if the choice is left to the employees, it would have to be exercised, in fairness, at the date of entry to the

But before people choose to have their own individual funds they should weigh carefully the risks to which they are exposed in relation to future inflation against which the final salary scheme insures them. To do so one really needs to look not just up to, but beyond, retirement age.

Consider, for example, the plight of someone who retires at a time of low inflation and low interest rates. His available cash will then purchase him a relatively low pension. If inflation then rises again, he has no protection. If a final salary scheme is well funded and well invested it can provide some help to its pensioners in this predicament, but the "individualized" pensioner has no one to look to. Another point frequently forgot-ten is that employees, unlike the self-employed, cannot normally choose the date at which they retire and are therefore the more vulnerable to variations in the rate of inflation and investment return in the years immediately before and after their pension is bought. Yours faithfully, MARTIN PATERSON, Chairman, Martin Paterson Associates Limited, 10 Buckingham Place, SW1. October 19.

Young offenders From Commander D. H. D. Merrin.

RN (retd) Sir, In his letter (October 12) Mr Logan-Salton attributes the closure of one-time "approved" schools (List D in Scotland and CHEs community homes with education -in England and Wales) to increasing use of custodial sentences to penal establishments. This may be related effect and cause in England and Wales, but it is certainly not the case. in Scotland.

Since 1971 and the introduction of the children's hearing system in Scotland children here under the age of 16 have not been liable to any form of custodial sentence except in extremely exceptional circums and only from the sheriff and high

Home Defence Force From Sir David Wills

Sir, Your leading article, "Mr Heseltine's opportunity" (October 12), dealt in general terms with an analysis of the revised structure, manpower and equipment requirements which it suggested should be brought into being over the next few years in Britain's three Services if they are to achieve their greatest effectiveness, and in your final paragraph you state that the challenge which Mr Heseltine faces today is that "the preponderance of British forces permanently main-tained on the European continent should be lightened, with Britain's Rhine Army reduced and the Air out.

Force redeployed."
Mr Heseltine, however, faces yet another challenge, which is how best to deal with a specific insidious and much less publicised Soviet threat to all the Nato allies and especially to Britain - namely, that of the Soviet diversionary brigades which are specifically trained for exactly the land of devastating sabotage which Argentina endeavoured to put into effect against Gibraltar at the time of effect against Gibraltar at the time of the Falklands war.

Fortunately this is a challenge which is far more easily (and cheaply) met than the challenge to which you refer in your leading article and which has to be dealt with in the context of our relationships with our Nato allies. For a total capital allocation of only £150m spread over some years (provided separately from the Defence Vote) there could be created

God's person From the Reverend Robert Liewelyn Sir, Lest it be thought that the urge to recognise the motherhood of God is peculiarly modern, will you allow the words of Julian of Norwich (though she was not first): "As truly as God is our father so just as truly is he our mother. There is much more to the same effect in her Revelations of Divine Love, completed in about 1393.

To call God he or she affirms that personality in the Godhead is not less than that which we experience in ourselves, even though we know it to be vastly beyond anything our human minds can comprehend. It is the only protection language offers against "it", which would make God s than personal.

All other children who offend are reported to a reporter, who may, after investigating and considering the whole circumstances of the child, refer the child to a children's hearing for consideration of "com-pulsory measures of care". One such measure can be placement in a List D school. Under no circumstances in any penal establishment.

Unlike the apparent experience in England and Wales over the past decade of a continuing flood tide of juvenile offending, in Scotland the tide ebbed significantly from 1974 to 1979. Regrettably it has turned again can a children's hearing place a child in the past three years.

The demand for List D places declined over the period from 1974 to 1975, roughly in parallel with the fall in ruvenile offending, and it therefore could reasonably have

- if the Government would only give the lead - a country-wide volunteer Home Defence Force of 700,000 (20,000 platoons of 35 apiece) which would almost certainly sharply reduce, if not elimin-ate, this threat. If conventional hostilities should ever break out between the Soviet Union and Nato one may be quite sure that the diversionary brigades would be used early on to the fullest possible advantage all over the country and the existence of this Home Defence Force would be one more powerful deterrent to war if it were in place - and known to be in place - to prevent this from happening before hostilities broke

We all hope that this will never happen, but as the Prime Minister said when speaking in Ottawa last month, "the Russians must never be tempted to believe they could win a war against the West".

Britain therefore should at least be prepared for the worst and can be prepared for the worst at a trivial cost (in the context of a Defence Budget of £16bn or more) added to a firm determination fostered by the Government. It is high time that the Government gave a lead in the creation of such a Home Defence Force, which would be part of the Forces of the Crown under the control of Parliament in the same way as the regular Forces. Valid marriages From Mrs J. E. B. Marsh

Sir, The General Synod of the Church of England might ponder Professor F. M. Stinton's statement that "at the middle of the twelfth century, when the marriage law of England at last became clear, English churchmen were plainly committed to the canonical doctrine that a valid marriage is contracted by the mere declaration of a man and a woman that they take each other as man and wife" (Anglo-Saxon England, page 662). In the matter of remarriage the lifetime of a spouse this had been allowed on compassionate grounds by a seventh-century Archbishop of Canterbury, Theodore of Tarsus. Today couples are being misled into thinking that the sacrament of marriage is administered by the clergy rather than by the couple to each other and that consequently a wedding in church is a different proposition from the blessing of a marriage. Yet in the former case the Anglican priest acts at surrogate to the registrar, ie, as legal witness, and in both cases he bestows a blessing in the name of God. Yours faithfully, RUTH ST BARBE MARSH,

Chaise House, Yatton Keynell, Chippenham, Wiltshire been expected that the demand would rise again with the increase in such offending.

This has not been the case and in fact from 1977-78 to 1982-83 the demand for List D places fell by a further one-third, with the consequence that earlier this year the Secretary of State for Scotland withdrew his certification from four List D schools. In addition a consultative document has recently been circulated to all interested parties by the Scottish Office inviting views on the anticipated further decline in the demand for such places.

Change in rules for benefit

From the Minister of State for Social

Sir, The new supplementary benefit rules mentioned by Pat Healy in her article on October 21 are intended to put a stop to a situation where public funds could be used to meet any charge, however high.

Under the old rules any charge whatever had to be met if it was unreasonable to expect the person concerned to move. The new arrangements remove this openended obligation. Instead, there will be three upper limits in each locality for nursing homes, residential care homes and for others.

In many cases, of course, payments will be well below the limit, since claimants get only the amount they actually have to pay. There has not been a nursing home limit before and charges in these homes are higher than in other kinds of accommodation. But as the old open-ended power was largely used for nursing homes they should under the new system be no higher than charges previously met and - and this is the important point - a maximum is being set to the amount paid in any locality.

When the Social Security Advisory Committee reported on the new regulations in July their main concern was not that too much would be paid but too little. They said that a system where the claimant had to rely entirely on the reasonableness of the limits could not function unless the limits were realistic. In preparing for the new system, therefore, supplementary benefit officers have been asked to take particular care to set realistic limits. Otherwise claimants, often elderly and infirm, could simply be unable to get accommodation.

The fact is that for many years private residential homes and nursing homes have been an important part of the range of services available for elderly people and have increased the range of choice open to those in need of care. The Government see no reason to restrict that choice. Local authorities and health authorities themselves can and do make use of these homes by paying for residents and patients in them. This is a sensible and desirable way of making the fullest use of the resources available for Residential homes are subject to statutory registration and inspection by local authorities and nursing homes by district health authorities. The Health and Social Services and Social Security Adjudication Act 1983 strengthened these safeguards.

To assist registration authorities the Government has invited expert working parties from the Centre for Policy on Ageing and the National Association of Health Authorities to draw up guidelines on standards of accommodation and management. Yours faithfully,

Argentine books

From Lord Kilmarnock Sir, As a very modest customer of Mr Cutler's I would like to support his letter, under the heading "Argentine books anomaly", in your issue of October 22.

Argentine publishers had a long and honourable tradition of publishing the complete works of major Spanish poets, such as Antonio Machado and Miguel Hernandez, when these works were either banned or issued in emasculated editions in Spain. It seems absurd to penalise both the publishers and their main British customers at a time when we should surely be encouraging Argentina to resume her proper role in the mainstream of hispanic culture. Yours faithfully, KILMARNOCK,

Miskitos' rights

House of Lords.

October 24.

From Mr Russell E. Chambers Sir, I disagree most strongly with Jeane Kirkpatrick on many issues, but the treatment of Miskito Indians by the Sandinista regime is not amongst them (Graham Greene's letter, October 15). In August of 1982 I was present at meeting in New York between a delegation of Miskito Indians and representatives both from the International League for Human Rights and the United Nations. The accounts they gave, the photographs of brutally maimed children and adults, the documented reports on the treatment of themselves, their families and their villages gave all

To be rehoused in what are prisoner of war camps and to be subjected to the most horrific form of persuasion to do so, amounts to a terrible and fundamental violation of the Miskito Indians' human rights.

I would ask Graham Greene not to rely only on the words of somebody working in one of these camps, but to speak to an Indian who has been on the receiving end of the whims of the Sandinista regime in getting there at all. Yours faithfully, RUSSELL E CHAMBERS.

'Homing' agent may speed detection of tumours and infections

Encouraging results are emerging from trials involving more than several thousand patients of a test devised for the early detection of tumours and infectious disorders, such as the severe type of liver infection by the hepatitis B organism, for which earlier treatment would be invaluable.

The method of diagnosis is based on an analysis of blood serum of individuals by a procedure invented by a research team of biologists and biochemists at the Philadephia firm, of Centocor, one of the leading new science-based companies specialising in medical applications of genetic ing a range of substances which are intended to provide an easy and cheap method of screening women for signs of abnormalities of the overies or symptoms of such infectious as hepatitis long before the condition is obvious from traditional methods of exami-

Doctors are particularly optimistic about the success at the Dana Farber Cancer Research Institute near here of a trial for women examined because of the suspicion of cancer of the ovaries. The screening was conducted in parallel with other established tests. Whereas the procedure usiung genetically engineered

The scientists are developa higher percentage of positive cases than the other methods, it also erroneously indicated 20 patients as positive who examination to be normal.

The method exploits a way of identifying foreign substances (antigens) in serum which are present only when a tumour is developing or when tissues are invaded by an infectious organism. The trick is to create in the laboratory a so to create in the motoratory a biological agent called a monoclonal antibody. When added to a sample of serum it will "home in" and attach itself only to that new sub-stance in the serum which is an indicator of a specific tumour or infection. Each monocional antibody is de-signed to match only one particular tumour or infection. But monocloual antibodies act as "markers" because they also carry with them a colouring agent or a radio-active label. Hence, when they are recovered from the bloss serum they are first identified by their markers, and they are then processed to discover if they have attached to them the additional material which is the tell-tale sign of a disorder. Experiments are at a much earlier stage of using monoclo-nal antibodies in a different role as carriers, to be injected into patients to take an antitumour drug directly to the site engineering opened the possi-bility, the idea of the "magic bullet" treatment was proposed more than 70 years ago by De Paul Erblich. The applications of mono-cional autibodies for diagnostic or treatment purposes hinges on the discoveries of Dr Cenar Milistala of the Medical Research Council's Molecular Biology Unit at Cambridge. He devised the process of taking tumour cells or cells infected by a virulent organism and injecting them into strains of a mice in such a way that the snimals would produce in their blood serum the desired menocional antibody.

applying and the trustees were simply liable to capital gains tax in the ordinary way. The rates of capital gains tax were lower than the relevant rates of income tax. It was said that there was no reason why the trustees should be liable to a different basis of taxation because they had worked out a formula which gave financial benefit from a future development.

There was no allegation that the trustees had the intention of avoiding tax and they were in Suct liable to capital gains tax. The transaction was a sensible and natural commercial transaction against the difficult background of a fluctuating property market for using land to the best advantage. It was said that it would be barsh if they were to be treated on another

The taxpayer made two principal submissions as to the words of section 488

First, that the phrase "arrange-ment or scheme" in section 488(2)(ii) should be construed as denoting only a scheme or arrangement of an artificial nature, namely, a self-seeking contrivance which was not a natural way of

for income tax but submitted that since they did not choose to develop the land themselves they could not be treated as if they did.

Therefore, it was submitted, there was no question of section 488 in an element of suster import and strongly prayed in aid the side note of section 488 in an element of suster import and strongly prayed which was simply to deal with "artificial transactions in land" desired to avoid tax. designed to avoid tax.

According to the wording of section 458(5)(b) any number of transactions were capable of constituting a single arrangement if there was a common purpose. It was said that the common purpose must be that of avoiding tax. However, in his Lordship's view, arrangement within the meaning of section 488(2/c) entered into between the trustees and the developers. The wording of section 488(2) did not say the motive of tax avoidance was a relevant consider-ation and therefore it must be wide enough to include this transaction. Second, it was submitted that there was no gain of a capital nature obtained "from" the relevant disposal of the land. The relevant disposal was the underlease. The 1971 lease generated the rights of the trustees to a gain by reference to a formula and therefore they could not be said to have made any gain "from" the underlease. However, section 488(2), when or main object of realizing a gain when disposing of it when developed; (2) that a gain of a capital nature was obtained by the trustees from the disposal of the land when developed because the trustees received premiums when the developerary premiums when the developers sold the underleases, and (3) that the trustees participated in an arrangement which had the effect that it enabled a gain to be realized by them by indirect means. Section 488(1) was not clear enough to give the construction which would enable the trustees to escape taxation under section 488(2). The sidenote was therefore somewhat misleading because on the facts the transaction could not be described as "artificial". The side note was a brief precis of the section and was therefore a most unsure guide to its construction.

Nor was his Lordship convinced that any real hardship was produced. There was little to the point that the trustees would have so pay only capital gains tax and no income tax. They had elected to sell the lease on terms which would enable them to obtain a proceeding. enable them to obtain a proportion when the land was developed. Accordingly Mr Justice Warner reached the right conclusion.

A blessed state of inadequacy

Though he cannot recall having given an interview in twenty years. Charles Dyer remains in town: an actor-dramatist of 55, he turns up in the reference books as the author of two of the most successful plays in the postwar history of the British theatre (Rattle of a Simple Manin 1962 and Staircase in 1966). but the rest of his life, and indeed far too much of his other work, remains clouded in a kind of mystery of which he proudly part-creator. Like a conjuror who believes that if you show the children how the rabbit comes out of the hat they will never watch the trick again, Dyer prefers to remain deeply anonymous, which seems a not nconsiderable feat when you then come face-to-face with one of the most manic and entertaining solo digressors in the business Now however there is chance to see where he has been these last few years: his new comedy Lovers Dancing (one which reunites him with the director Donald McWhinnie for the first time since Rattle) opens at the Albery tonight with a cast headed by Paul Eddington, Georgina Hale, Colin Blakely and Jane Carr. But what is it

Love, Hate, Greed, Desire, Loss. I only write about life, about people divorced from God, because God has spent twenty million years laughing at My characters may not understand each other, but together they tell a story about people's inadequacies and about the sharing of those inad-equacies. It's about people shricking for glory, solving little mysteries, composing a snatch of music and hearing it on a istant crackle from Samarkand. It's about the juxtaposition of two couples, about loneliness and frustration, about lovers who, though faithful, can't come to terms with each other. It's about good in an evil world. What else is there? And you wonder why I never give interviews."

The time has come for

Dyer: "The wrong sort of moustache"

postwar British theatre: he is not a child of the subsidized companies, nor a money-making Shaftesbury Avenue dinosaur. Like Pinter and Osborne and most of the best dramatists of our or any time he was originally an actor, but he does not come of the Royal Court or the National or the RSC or the pubs or the clubs. He is a loner, and what he writes about is loneliness. Harold Hobson once noted that "against dispiriting odds, Dyer's people are capable of behaving unexpectedly well -that is one reason why his work is so much more exhibitating than that of most of his contemporaries". Nobody who saw Scoffeld and Magee in Staircase at the Aldwych (or even Burton and Harrison in the disappointing movie version) could have failed to realize they were in the presence of some great writing; what may have been less obvious is that they were watching the middle part of a trilogy of ioneliness made up on either side by Rattle and a play called Mother Adam which got critically destroyed at Hamp-stead in 1973 despite the fact that Hobson (again) called it "one of the few real tragedies of

The plays belong together: woman, Staircase about man and man, Mother Adam about man and mother. Now we have a play about couple and couple, and the pattern develops. "My plays are all about carrying on when you aren't needed. What's wrong with the world today is that very few of us are really

And Dyer is nothing if not resilent. The only child of a travelling salesman, he was born in Shrewsbury and grew up in liford and Manchester and Barnet, where his father was travelling at the time. At the age of 17, with no theatre in the blood, he took a job as call-boy at the Hulme Hippodrome in Manchester and started almost immediately to write:

"I learnt very early that the only way to be a playwright was to be an actor first. That way you were at least inside the company instead of relying on the post. That way you could at least hand over your plays to the director in person. Besides, my early plays were terrible, so I my early plays were terrible, so I had to make my living as an actor. I worked for Wolfit, for Anew McMaster, played old Robert Morley roles and toured for 30 weeks in The Entertainer wondering how Olivier could ever have been as good in the role as I was. Before that I used to sell vacum cleaners, and peare in the RAF. Then I was a stooge to Terry Thomas and took over in Worm's Eye View at the Whitehall. Then I was the sleazy lover in the film of Loneliness of the Long Distance Runner. What else is a playwright supposed to do to make a living for a wife and three

"Sometimes I used to be rehearsing some Ray Cooney farce in Southsea and playing another of my own in Portsmouth on the same day; other times I lived off Wanted One Body: a thriller of mine which mercifully is still the one that really pays the rent in bad years. I started off trying to be Agatha Christie, and only became myself years later. I reckon a table. Mr Dyer does not fit get produced. Most of the easily into any historical or people who read Rando and theories above the same table. before the first night.

> "For a long time, the acting paid for the writing: I used to get five pounds a week from the theatre in Crewe for acting, and about five pence a week for the writing. Now it's the other way round because I still act a bit, though I never found it easy. Casting directors used to tell me I had the wrong sort of moustache. Eight plays of mine Southsea, but none of them got much further and that was when I taught myself to expect nothing, to plod on regardless. "I come of no tradition, have no friends in the theatre, have never seen a play unless I had to act it. All my plays start as novels, simply because that's the way I have to write them to get the full picture. Not that anybody ever really understands what the plays are about, at least not critics; Staircase is no more about homosexuality than Rattle was about impotence. Both are plays about loncliness. I only realized that the two men in Staircase were homosexual long after I had started writing the play.

My plays tend to lie around on people's desks a lot: there's one I haven't seen since 1974, but on the cover I wrote PETER HALL'S OFFICE COPY DO NOT REMOVE and I think it's been there ever since. The great thing is not to get depressed and not to believe all you read: I have a letter from Lord Olivier promising to do Staircase with Albert Finney at the first Chichester Festival, and I never did find out what happened. Years later Typan wrote to me carry on in the face of that Calcutal but I don't believe in realization." dirty words so I declined, and I think that led to a certain coolness with the National Theatre.

"But somewhere in the world somebody is always doing Rattle and somebody else is always doing Wanted One Body, and somebody else is always doing Staircase, and that's good to know. The great thing is to write your plays so that no actor or director can mess them around in rehearsal. I don't ever meet other playwrights: the only time I ever went to a dramatists' club dinner, C. P. Snow told me I was decadent so I haven't been back. What I've done is create a language of my own, for people who want to share inadequacies with other inadequate people. But I'm still marching into Jordan: I'll be here a long time after a lot of up in their niches. You can desuroy the Sixties and the Seventies and the Eighties, but you can never destroy a simple than changing the orientation of the body, when three per-formers in a folk dance suddenly travel a yard or so forward, it is quite startling.

The hands carry much of the activity, also the head and shoulders; some dances begin or end with the performers kneeling. The way they sometimes enter or leave the stage (with a little shuffling barefoot step on quarter-point) while the music is playing gives the impression that they could go on longer if so inclined. Yet the dances themselves are quite formal, conveying, through remarkably similar movements differently used, a refined or aggressive nature, extending from a sub-

The music is primarily that of small gamelan orchestra, in which one player (apparently the leader) doubles on a kind of fiddle, another provides a sometimes syncopated ac-companiment on drums, and the musicians at times add a vocal element in which each contributes short single notes to a complex melodic pattern. A slightly comic double-reed instrument and drums ac-company the warlike solo, and there is a pleasant musical interlude from a chamber group of two bamboo flutes and two zithers. John Percival

The expected agreed bid from fixed on bid and specialist situations.

Among the leaders ICI fluctuated wildly ahead of third quarter figures later today, but closed all square at 570p. Analaysts have been looking for pre-tax profits of between £130m to £140m, but the group may be capable of something in excess of £150m. This compares with a meagre £58m last year. -

Bid speculation again boosted shares of London Brick a firm takeover favourite recently. Lord Hanson's Hanson Trust recently increased its stake to about 9.5 per cent and now it looks as though another big buyer has appeared on the scene. At last night's close of 102½p, up 4p, the group is valued at £143,2m.

Avana Group profits are still rising strongly, thanks to its food business with Marks & Spencer and a rising trade in own-label breakfast cereals. The company is introducing more new products than ever, but its shares are now asking for high profit performance.

Britain's trade with the rest of account surplus to £270m last the world swung into the black last month for only the third time this year. The surplus of £110m in September far surpassing City expectations - followed deficits of £138m in August and £350m in July.
But it is too early to tell whether this signals an im-provement in Britain's underly-ing trade balance which has deteriorated sharply this year. The monthly figures are highly erratic and those for the third quarter as a whole sugg a further worsening in trace performance, with exports slightly lower and imports rather higher than in the spring. The traditional surplus on trade in invisibles - services such as banking insurance and shipping - valued at an estimated £160m a month in the third quarter, pushed up the balance of payments current

The pickup in the domestic economy this year has sucked in more imports though markets for British exports remain depressed. The volume of imports in the third quarter was more than 10 per cent up on a year earlier, while exports grew by just over 1 per cent, after a short-lived surge last winter.

Trade officials said yesterday that import penetration appeared to have increased in recent months while the underlying level of exports, excluding oil, had declined since the

Britain's non-oil trade in goods has been in deficit to the tune of £2,000m a quarter this year, outweighed – but only just - by the surplus earned on trade virtually every sector of the economy. Between the second and third quarters the increases were most marked for chemicals and consumer goods, especially cars, to meet boom-But imports of food and basic materials (other than fuel) fell in the third quarter, suggesting that companies have not been rebuilding stocks.

The Government has been hoping that some restocking investment and exports would take over from the consumer spending spree as the impetus next year. But the trade figure provide little encouragement. The latest Treasury forecast for the 1983 balance of pay-ments will be published with the Chancellor's autumn state

Whose hands on the electronics?

As if the prospet of indus-trial action by some staff over Christmas opening hours were not enough, the clearing banks face the prospect of another unwelcome gift from the National Consumer Council. Its report on personal banking services will be published on December 14 and is likely to contain some controversial and robust recommendations.

A foretaste of what can be expected emerged yesterday from Mr Jeremy Mitchell, director of the NCC, when he addressed the FT conference on banking electronic technology.

New technology and the bearing it has on competition among different financial lestitutions will be issues in the NCC report. "If consumers are going to get maximum benefit from electroic banking, then the existing barriers to competition need to be examined thoroughly to see whether they really are necessary. In particular, will all types of financial institutions have equal opportunities to provide the new banking tech-nologies?", Mr Mitchell Mr Mitchell argued that banks, building societies and others should be able to the company's reception by compete on an equal footing in supplying services to the consumer and the Government should work to ensure that the legal and regulatory framework allowed this.

He pointed out that building societies, for instance, are at a competitive disadvantage as regards payment of wages (it takes several days longer than if wages are paid into a bank account) - although, of course, the advantages are not all on the side of the

His premise, however, is able to choose whether they draw a cheuse on a bank or a building society or - once electronic payment at the reality - whether their bank or building society account is debited.

Supervisory and regulat-ory changes will be needed before building societies and others can hope to compete on an equal footing with the banks and that will innvolve additional responsibilities and increased prudential monitoring.

Equally crucial, however, is the question of access to technology now that the advances in electronics are making it increasingly easy a in theory at least - for non-banks to compete with the big clearers. Reading between the lines of Mr Mitchell's speech, it takes no imagination to infer that the NCC is concerned about the big banks choking off competition by limiting access to electronic

It is not hard to see why. The big banks control the cheque clearing system, the automated system for payment of wages and - at this stage - the proposed electronic point-of-sale payments system. There is considerale

Both the Bank of Eng land and the Office of Fair Trading are already keenly interested in the question of access to electronic banking technology. However, would be no surprise if the recommended NCC changes in the way access is presently determined.

Fighting the counterfeiters

Several hundred executives from the cosmetics and toiletries industry will gather at the CBI's London headquarters next Thursday for a teach-in on the dangers to their business from counterfeiting of goods in the valuable pre-Christmas trading period.

The organizers of the seminar, the Cosmetic, Toiletry and Perfumery Association (CTPA). will use the occasion to launch a new set of guidelines to help stamp out the counterfeiting of famous brand names like Chanel and Estée Lauder which is costing the industry millions of pounds each year

Estimates by the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs (Gatt) suggest that the French perfume industry alone is losing £50m a year from counterfeiting of its products. But this may only be the tip of the iceberg. Several container loads of allegedly counterfeit goods, packaging equipment and labels have recently been impounded by police. Mr Bryan Cassidy, director general of the CPTA, which speaks for 80 British companies in the perfume and toiletries industries, had joined forces with representatives of the fashion MOIOL component goods, and drinks industries to call for stiffer penalties for counterfeiters. Under existing fine, unless a charge of conspri-racy to defraud can be proved.

Similar lobbying by the video industry led to a change in the law from last July which means that a video dealer can be fined up to £1,000 for every pirate tape sold, with a maximum of two years in iail if the case is taken to the crown courts. This compares with a maximum fine of £50 under previous legislation. The video industry, which includes producers and distributors of pre-recorded cassettes, is hoping that the tougher penalties, coupled with increasing vigilance by the industry, will help turn the tide against the video pirates who have taken a 65 per cent (£100m) share of the British videotape market.

At the forefront of the war igainst the video pirates is the Federation Against Copywright Theft, a private company set up by the industry to tackle the crop was ruined. More disturbing is the in-creasing activity in the production of counterfeit drugs which are passed for real in chemists throughout the world with potentially calamitous consequences. Even counterfeit perfumes can lead to skin rashes and permanent skin distigurement in some circumstances.

Mr Cassidy of the CTPA said that although there is no need to scare people away from cosmetics, counterfeiters will clearly be less scrupulous about the ingredients they use than legitimate manufacturers who carefully control those they use. Mr Peter Crockford, dviser to the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders, is also concerned about the dangers faced by consumers who buy counterfeit motor components. Although the biggest problems facing the indus-

Most of the motor industry's energies have been channelled into combating counterfeiting where it is easier to bring about a conviction. The problem of passing-off will be resolved only if laws can be changed in countries wich may recognize that counterfeiting is illegal, but do not see anything wrong with copying goods to be sold under a different brand name.

Taiwan is still the centre of the world motor component counterfeiting industry. Despite a recent change in the law there, making offenders liable to five years in jail if they are caught, there has been no respite for British companies. Since the stiffer penalties were introduced in January only two cases have been dealt with by the Taiwanese authaccording to British

In an effort to combat the 10 manufacturers have joined together to form a European motor industry anti-counterfeiting group. Its members include famous names like Ferodo and Lucas as well as top French and Italian manufacturers, hit by sales of counterfeit lights, brake and clutch components. Another aspect of the trade, which particularly concerns trading standards officers at Hounslow, who cover London's Heathrow airport, is the fast-growing business of importing components from the Far East and India to be repackaged in England ready for re-export as the real thing with British documentation. One officer said: "Counter-feiting is definitely one of our biggest problems. We have got a strongroom full of components, jeans, and tapes. However, like trading standards officers in so many other areas of the country, the 24-member Hounslow staff can barely cope with the problem which is just one of many areas where they act as public watchdogs. In future the Hounslow Trading Standards Department will concentrate on "blitzing" one or two problem areas at a time, rather than maintaining a regular watch on one area of investigation, to try Despite recent newsworthy successes, investigators have noted a change in the pattern of trade. Traditionally, the counterfeit goods originated in the Far East, first from Japan, then Taiwan and Korea. But Mr Vincent Carratu, whose agency is one of the leading private investigation firms working in this field, said: "These counter-to use its staff more effectively.

feits were usually rubbish". He is much more concerned by the increasing number of sophisticated counterfeits which are coming from Europe. Mr Carratu blames recession and free trade within the EEC for encouraging the development of a more sophisticated counterfeiting industry which concentrates on high value goods like perfume and fashion accessories

The problem is aggravated by the high mark-up on fashion products which carry a famous brand name. Often counterfeiters can make a product which is of identical quality to the real thing, but sell it much cheaper. In these cases, they are merely cashing in on the huge sums invested by manufacturers in promoting and marketing their goods and the consumer actually finishes up with a good deal.

"Companies which were struggling against the recession suddenly realized that they could make a lot of money very quickly by copying other prod-ucts," says Mr Carratu, "In the past, counterfeits were often so bad that people could always identify them. Now the Europeans are far more shrewd.

In addition, the EEC has made it much easier for counterfeiters to avoid strictly-controlled distribution channels which used to help control the supply of goods to any given market place. Whereas it used to be difficult to transfer goods from one market to another, today it is much easier. "This makes it difficult to check where goods are made," Mr Carratu said.

He urges companies to vet the distribution of their products carefully and watch for changes in ordering patterns by retailers who may be switching to alternative, counterfeit, sources of supply.

The Government is also taking the problems seriously and has recently established an anti-counterfeiting unit at the Department of Trade and Industry to investigate. How-ever, there is a feeling within industry that the best chance they have of tackling the counterfeiters is to track down the culprits themselves by hiring their own investigators. But as one investigator said:

"It is a bit like painting the Forth road bridge really. As soon as you stamp out one problem it re-emerges some-

How to privatize the deterrent

Privatization could prove one of the most popular as well as powerful methods of stimulating economic growth and efficiency over the next few years. The state is usually far less efficient at managing operations than the private sector and can often achieve its purposes at least as well by buying in services, regulating competition and, if wanted subsidizing uneconomic activi-

But, both the economic and political momentum could be rapidly lost if the practical results turn sour, for instance if local authority functions were so rapidly contracted out that private management could not cope with the expansion and services failed.

The increasing stridency of the philosophical drive to minimize the public sector, is, for that reason, worrying.
In essence it is based on the principle, now most closely associated with the Austrian Friedrich Havek, that for functions to be formed com nally is itself a threat to freedom, democracy and the moral responsibility of individ-

The conflicts can be seen easily by looking at the minimal state itself. The most enthusiastic proponents of demolishing public sector activity make one absolute exception: the defence of the realm. The individual cannot defend himself against the Russians, so it must be done communally and not bought in because mercenaries cannot be alone in the hedgerows.

In contrast to the conventional mercenary, a bought-in nuclear deterrent might actu-ally be more convincing, since the company would have no territory of its own and could. therefore, supply the goods if required, without threatening itself with extinction, unlike the sovereign state. Indeed, the company's commercial future would depend on delivery.

Moreover, multi-national companies would enable even tiny states (or territories like the Falklands) to buy full protection at a cost they could afford without dangerous pro-

Turbo faces Canada's biggest bankruptcy

From David Young Calgary

Turbo Resources, a Canadian petrol and mining group, is selling some of its mineral holdings to try to head off the largest bankruptcy in the country's history.

The company, based in algary, owes Can$900m Calgary, owes Can$900m (£601m) to 12 investment groups. Two have been granted udgment against Turbo for Can$25m, making the company legally bankrupt, but have agreed to give it more time to negotiate a debt restructuring.

Turbo has run into trouble because of production problems at its Calgary oil-refining plant and because of a disastrous fall in sales in the highly-competi-tive Canadian petrol market One company took price-cut-ting to its ultimate in Winnipeg when it paid motorists four cents a time to fill up at its petrol stations.

SNOOKER Wales in mood to win third

title By Sidney Frinkin

Wales' three musketeers, Ray Reardon, Terry Griffiths and Doug Mountjoy, gave a sparkling exhibition of sharp shooting in the State Express World Team Classic at the Hexagon Theatre, Reading, yesterday. In their group A match against Australia, they won all three games in the afternoon and at that stage, were certain of a place in the semifinal round. Wales have won this event twice and have set their hearts on doing so again.

Of the Australians, John Cam-pbell played well against Terry Griffiths but lost 2-1. Warren King struggled against Ray Reardon, who won 2-0, and Eddie Charlton, their captain, started well against Mountjoy only to be outgunned eventu-ally by the determined and experienced Weishman.

Reardon was in one of those ominous moods which always seem to leave his opponent with a sense of inferiority and the Welsh captain, without making any sizable breaks, wrapped up two frames against King. Reardon's best effort was a break of 35 in the second frame.

After Charlton had won the first frame against Mountjoy, the Welshman broke off for the second weissman broke off for the second frame. Charlton potted a red but apart from failing to add to this initial success, he let Mountjoy in to make a break of 30. Mountjoy. playing with growing assurance, won the firame comfortably with a break of 32. His scoring became more consistent in the third frame which he also won with a break of Griffiths coolly won the first frame of his game against Campbell. It was an enterprising contest embelished by a break of 45 from Griffiths. The Welshman looked as if he would run away with the second, a break of 26 enabling him to take a substantial lead. But the young Australian, who has already made a favourable impression in this country, responded with a clearance break of 32 to win the frame. But Campbell was given little chance in the third frame by Griffiths with compiled a magnificent break of 102, the third threeigure break of the tournament, to win the same easily.

Alex Higgins was visibly relieved on Tuesday night when he heat Eddie Sinclair, the Scotish captain, in the tie-break to give Northern ireland a thrilling 4-3 win in group B. "I would have been happy if Denis Taylor had played this tie-break instead of me," Higgins said. "But I am glad I did because it has helped me to dispel my inhi-bitions." Earlier, Higgins had lost both his games, the first against Ian Black, the second against Sinciair whose win took the match into the Mark McCormack's International Management Group have given an undertaking to the International Amateur Athletic Federation that they will not act as agents for individual athlets in the future. The IAAF clearly want to avoid the sort of IMG incursion into the sport that surrounded the meeting of de Castella and Salazar inthe marathon earlier this year. IMG literally took over the organization of an Autralian marathon with the sole intention of selling a confrontation between the selling a confrontation between the two previously unbeaten marathon men. The IAAF stepped in and refused a race permit, but IMG were not to be outdone; and simply bought their way into the Rotterdam Marathon, which already had a permit.

De Castella won the race and the two men allegedly carned more than $12,500. But the most distressing repercussion was that Salzar could not then contest the United States marathon trials the following week and subsequently missed the World Championships, for which officials of The Athletics Congress (the United States governing body) directly blamed IMG.

Other news from the first day of the European Calendar Conference in Madrid concerns Britain more directly, it seems that the new Soviet administration are as lukewarm about the projected fixture in Tiblisi as their British counterparts. It was pencilled in for September 8 and 9, one month after the Olympics when most of the top British athletes will probably be carning money on the independent circuit. So the match looks as if it will quietly die.

The Congress finishes at the weekend with elections and the most senior post the presidency of the European Athletics Association, may slip from British hands. Arthur Gold is seeking re-election, but it seems that the Eastern bloc, who have supported Gold in the past, and most of the Latin American countries are favouring his opponent, Artur Takec, of Yugoslavia.

It also looks as if some adroit British manocuvring has saved next year's Edinburgh permit meeting. The Edinburgh meeting last season was the only one of three British permit meetings - where athletes are paid participation money - that did not draw large crowds, and there had been a danger of it being

Peter Hinchliff must have felt that his racing world was falling apart at the seams whin his two previous horses Ten Dollars More and Our Balloo doed within days of against sending any of his stars to son on Lion Hill.

Now that Dickenson has decided against sending any of his stars to Wincanton today, the Terry Biddle-combe Trophy is totally at the mercy of Brown Chamberlin who will not need to be even at his best to cope with Ambremont and Lord John. Dickie Murray (1.0) and Park Rainbow (1.30) also look likely winners for Fred Winter at the popular Somerset course. Easterby hurdler flops at completing a double for trainer Harry Rell. The favourite disputed the lead until three out but then rapidly lost his place. Peter Easterby, trainer of Suiz Bula said: "He was never going well. Suiz Bula suid: "He was never going well."

"He was never going well Sola Bula suffered a bit of back trouble last year and it could be a reoccurence of that."

Matin Berry, who partnered Selbourne Record (7-1), was landing only the minth winner of his career and the third this season. Harry Bell whose Hawick stable is in great form with twenty winners so far this season, said: "I did not think my house had any chance of beating form with twenty winners so far this season, said: "I did not think my house had any chance of beating Sula Bula today."

Beaurwam sparked off the Bell double when taking the Kielder Chase by four lengths from Stand Back. John J O'Neill, landing his thirty-sixth winner of season, took over two out after Stand Back had made an error. "Now he should win a good race." Bell said after Beamwan had landed his sixth success of the season. Ryeman, trained by Peter Easterby, started S-4 favourite but finished last.

Kudos became a possible runner for the Hennessy Cognac Gold Cup at Newbury on November 26 when slamming Why Forget by four lengths in the John Eustace Smith Tropby. David Dutton, who was partnering his first winner since becoming a father last week, pushed Kudos mas backed from 7-1 to 11-2.

Robert Gray, a dairy farmer from Gateshead, saddled his first winner since getting his full licence when Thoubell Arch sweet by 10 lengths from El Djem in the first division the novice hurdle.

John Franctine, who took a heavy fall from Neat at Hunting-

Dobn Francome, who took a heavy fall from Neat at Huntingdon, last Sanorday, has LAC to give up the ride on Brown Chamberlin at Wincanton today. Ben de Haan takes over from Francome

Why the best may be yet to come

Cavalier Cecil leaves us waiting for the stilton and port at 30, the wir; and at 40, the judgment, why question the decision of Henry Cecil, that racehorse trainer extraordinaire, who at the age of 40 has chosen to publish his autobiography, On the Level (Harrap, eg. 50)?

Cecil is at the peak of a glittering career that in 14 years has produced four championships, over 1,000 winners and £5m in prize money, although as yet no Derby winner. Inevitably, his amusing and informative story is incomplete – it lacks a satisfaction, roundings [1] like thittened.

informative story is incomplete – it lacks a satisfacatory rounding-off, like stilton and port after the main meal.

He preferred, he said, to put pen to paper while he could still remember his tales, instead of waiting 20 years by when senility might have crept in. By that time, he added, few would want to read it in any

Cecil trades in humour as well as horses. He is the master of the one-liner. Tall, with trendy clothes and Alain Delon looks, he enriches the racing scene, standing out in a crowded paddock alongside the regimental tweeds, brogues and battered

A non-conformist, perhaps, but racing's cavalier champion has earned the establishment's respect his list of owners reads like Debrett.

His early years were difficult. Rohays-His early years were difficult. Rohays-Cecil, his mother, lost a husband and two brothers during the last war and was left to raise four small sons before marrying Captain Sir Cecil Boyd-Rochfort, a formidable man who trained horses at Freemason Lodge, Newmarket, Unhappy school days were relieved only by carefree holidays at Crathes Castle in Kincardineshire. Having failed the analysis.

Kincardineshire. Having failed the en-trance examination to Eton, Henry and his twin brother. David, were dispatched to Canford where they spent five years that were "neither memorable, nor particularly eniovable".

After leaving school the two Cacils worked at Lord Derby's Woodland Stud where they formed a close friendship with "Tote" Cherry-Downes, now a successful bloodstock agent. Periods at Mme Jean Couturie's stud, the Hara du Mesnil, near Le Mans, and Newmarket's Equine Research Station gave Henry Cecil a grounding in horsemanship. Later he worked in the United States and Canada before returning to do a one-year course at the Royal Agricultural College, Ciren-

Pakistan win with spin

Whyalla (Reuter) - Abdul Qadir, the leg spinner, swiftly made his inroads before Qadir's misture of mark on Pakistan's tour of Australia leg breaksand googlies , sent the with a match-winning five for 15 in country side plunging, from 68 for three to 79 for eight. Mohammad free of recent muscle stiffness in his innings by taking the last two wickets.

Place. Cecil set up as a trainer in 1969 and the Cecil set up as a trainer in 1969 and the thrill of his first winner, Celestial Cloud, was poignantly described: "There were tears rolling down my cheeks as I stood at the end of the drive; waiting for Julie. When at last she appeared, smiling from ear to ear, I simply jumped with joy as she drove up to me, hooting all the way. The thrill of knowing I had trained my first winner is something I will never, never forget."

forget."
When Sir Noel retired in 1976, Cecil, at a generous price, was able to acquire Warren Place. It is a family home he loves, where roses bloom, his two children play and animals abound.

Now, at the crossroads of his career, this sensitive and talented man intends to cut down on his huge stable string Next season it will be 140 horses instead of 155, small reduction only because of the retention of many senior horses.

"I'm cutting back my two-year-old intake to 60, instead of 90. That doesn't mean we will be less competitive, just more selective. I'll have to think about knocking down a few boxes, otherwise Warren Place will look like a ghost town," Cecil carries the stresses of modern racing well. "In the years to come I don't want to gad about as I used to. The stable is no problem, I can manage that. It's the travelling that is the bind. The sales, particularly, are so bectic.

"At Keeneland this year, out of an original entry of 2,000, we whittled our requirements down to just eight. It was the same at the Highfilyer Sales at Newmarket – just four. Unfortunately, because they stood out, everybody wanted them, too. I was the underbidder for one at nearly $1.6m. It's frightening. All right, the colt was well bred, but he might be useless. We used to reckon on between £20,000 and £60,000 as a good working price for a horse; now £40,000 is considered cheap."

What of the Arab influence? Cecil believes the situation will settle down shortly. "I'll be training 22 horses for the Maktoum family next season, including the Derby runner-up, Carlingford Castle, and there are some nice young horses among them. But just because you are training for the Arabs, you must not push aside your other owners. After all, the Arabs might be gone tomorrow." What does concern Cecil is that so many new owners coming into racing are doing it for commercial gain not for the sport itself.

Discussing his training methods, he did not accept the criticism that he was hard on his two-year-olds. "Some two-year-olds

The Times Guide to career development

Taking business degrees

Mr Robert Haslam, who became chairman of the British Steel Corporation in September, belongs to the emerging group of top British executives who have been to business school. He holds a firstclass degree in coal-mining from Birmingham University, and took Henley Management College's nineweek residential general management course in 1956, when he was 33. At that time, having started as a mining engineer, he was personnel director at the National Coal Board.

Four years later, Mr Haslam moved to ICI - an organization which has always been a strong supporter of formal management training - and eventually became deputy chairman. Other dis-tinguished Henley "old boys" include the chairmen of Kodak, the Tioxide Group and Boots. All these men feel they benefited in improved self-confidence and awareness of wider issues, from their experiences at Henley. However, they would probably have got to their present positions in any event.

Most of the participants in the Henley course are sponsored by their employers. They have already been picked out and groomed as potential star performers. There is probably little point, in term of even contemplating paying the £6,000-plus fee unless they have their sights on an employer who is convinced of the value of this type of course. Many companies still have ambiguous feelings about business schools. Some are downright antagonistic. A prudent midile-ranking executive would do well to test carefully the diplomatic climate in his company before embarking on such a step.

In her third article on Ways to the Top, Patricia Tisdall looks into investment in training for executive posts

Becoming more widely recognized by companies are the Masters degree in business studies or business administration which is now being offered by some 42 British universities. One of the first graduates to reach top executive ranks from this fairly new stable is Mr John Egan, who was appointed chairman and chief executive of Jaguar Cars in 1980 at the age of 43. Mr Egan was a School's first Master class in 1968.

Like those of many MBA's, Mr Egan's career spans experience position, with several companies, including Shell, General Motors and Massey Ferguson.

Most MBA students fund themselves from a combination of savings and education grants for the year or two years of full-time study needed to complete the course. The age of candidates, as well as standards, vary between different centres. But at the London Business. School, which is reckoned to have stringent entry requirements, the average age is 27, and after obtaining a first degree, students will typically have had four years of practical experience in employment before going to the school.

Will the financial and other sacrifices needed to take a full-time MBA pay off? It is still too early to say, but the indications are that it probably will. An LBS survey of 242 out of the total of 1,200 who have graduated so far shows that more than 40 per cent had reached director level or above by last summer, Salaries also tend to be considerably higher after gradu-ation than before. Considering that the first British MBA graduates are only now in their middle forties, the

Employing women and minors

It may seem something of an anachronism that there should be any restrictions on women's working which conflicts with the general principle that men and women should be treated equally. It would be strange, too, if in times of high unemployment, when the govern-ment is committed to the ideal that those between the ages of 16 and 18 should all be given work of some sort, there were anything on the statute book which might prevent this. Both women and young persons are, however, subject to what might seem to be outdated and often unwarranted restrictions on the bours which they may lawfully be allowed to work in certain types of employment. The Factories Act 1961 and the Shops Act 1950 both impose restrictions on the hours of work of women and young persons in some places. The Young Persons (Employment) Act 1938 also restricts the hours of work of errand or delivery boys and of young persons em-ployed in places of public entertainment or recreation and in clubs and

In the United Kingdom there are no general restrictions on the hours which men are permitted to work. although there are restrictions on all employees in a very small number of industries such as baking and heavy goods vehicle drivers. Apart from meral exceptions, a man may work for as long as he wishes

By contrast, in factories, women and young persons may not work for more than four and a half hours without having a break of at least half an hour. (They may work up to five hours if a break of 10 minutes is allowed during the period.) Women and young persons are not allowed to work during the hours of 8pm to 7am. (Calculation of the limited overtime allowance is on a factory-wide basis which itself leads to considerable administrative prob-

Sundays and public holidays which, so far as men are concerned. can be agreed between employer and employee as normal days of work or as holidays, are compulsory rest days for women and young persons (although days off in lieu can be agreed in certain circumstances): maximum hours of work for each day are also closely controlled.

The "sweat shops" where women once worked inordinately long hours as seamstresses, and other such institutions, are no longer with us, and the trade union system is unlikely to allow such establishments to re-emerge. In industries where unions are not usually recognized, the wages council system, which provides for minimum terms and conditions of employment in the trades and industries to which it applies, would be adequate to overcome any fears of a new wave of exploitation.

The Factories Act 1961 does allow for the Factory inspectorate to grant exemptions to employers to allow both women and young persons to work during the evenings and on night shift.

But although exemptions are readily granted, the process still takes a considerable time and is of limited application: an employer cannot get a general exception from the Factories Act restrictions.

This, in turn, means that unless the factory owner is willing to apply for, and can obtain, exemptions unless, indeed, he has the time available to do so before the work begins, or before he needs new employees on a particular job -these restrictions, instead of protecting women and young people may well put obstacles in their path.

Many people feel that since work is difficult to obtain and there is a diminishing amount of work avail-able, there should be restrictions imposed on the hours of work of all employees in factories and, indeed, generally, so that work can be more equitably distributed. The current restrictions, which are inherently discriminatory, cannot be justified. It might well be thought that a young woman of 17 or a normal fit woman would generally require rather less statutory protection from overworking than some rather less

The comrade in HAPPY BIRTHDAY, COMRADE MARTIN (Charmel 4, 11.25pm) is none other than Martin Luther, whose quincentenary it is this year and, although Bill Stevenson's documentary is about the relationship between Church and State in East Germany, it would be foolish to infer from the title that toolsh to siter from the title that there is any element of state sanction, or even enthusiasm, in the birthday greeting. It is made abundantly clear by the German Democratic Republic's secretary of state for church affairs that this is not a Socialist church, but a church and state for church and the secretary of state for church affairs that this is in a Socialist state, and when interviewer Paul Oestreicher attempts to summarize the politician's views as implying that a state of unity and friendship exists en Church and State, he is firmly, albeit smilingly, corrected.

Grenada fighting as US begins evacuation

1,000 paratroops form the 82nd zirborne division. The first 61 American evacuees left Grenada around midday yesterday, and were being flown to a US Air Force base in Charleston, South Carolina. Other evacuation flights were expected to leave the island late yesterday and today.

The State Department said that half the 1,000 Americans on the island wanted to leave. About 600 of themare staff or students at St George's University medical school. The two campuses were said to be under control of the invasion force.

There was some dispute, however, over exactly how many Americans had wanted to leave Grenada before the first American troops landed on Tuesday morning.

One of the reasons for the invasion given by the Reagan Administration was to ensure the safety of American nationals on the island. But the school's Thancellor and others attached o the university had said the Americans were safe and that most of them did not wish to

The State Department also said the US would evacuate any other foreigners who wished to

The Reagan Administration has been stung by international criticism of the invasion, particularly by Britain and France. A State Department spokesman admitted that the action had put a strain on relations with its European allies, but attempted to shrug this off by saying: "There are always differences withing a closely-knit family".

Mr George Shultz, the Sec-retary of State, who is to have talks with the Foreign Ministers of Britain, France and Italy in Paris today, is expected to come in for criticism over the United States's failure to consult fully with its allies before launching the invasion. However, the main purpose of the meeting is to discuss the situation Lebanon following last Sunday's bomb outrages in Beirut.

President Reagan formally notified House and Senate leaders on Tuesday night of the invasion under the War Powers Resolution. Meanwhile it is unclear now long the American toops will remain on the island once the fighting is over. President Reagan and other members of his Administration said they would leave as soon as possible.

Invasion: The conflicting accounts

How the diplomatic moves developed according to the US, Britain and the Caribbeans

Friday, Oct 21

United States: US naval task force heading for Grenada after late Thursday decision to send it to the island. According to US officials, Administration had no plans to intervene at this stage. Britain: According to Sir Geoffrey Howe's state-ment in the Commons yesterday, the British High Commissioner in Barbados had learnt that some Caribbean heads of government were pressing their colleagues in the Caribbean community to ask for military help Caribbean: Mr John Adams, Prime Minister of Barbados, claimed in BBC interview yesterday that a decision to invade Grenada had been taken and

Britain and US were invited to join in. "They should have been aware of this on Friday," he said.

Saturday

United States: President Reagan began seriously considering a military operation after being approached by the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States (OECS). According to Senator Larry Bressler, a Republican from South Dakota, consultations with Britain may have been put in Britain: Britain told that seven heads of government of OECS had decided to put together a multi-national force and to call for support from friendly governments (according to yesterday's statement by Sir Geoffrey). Washington informed the Government that it had received a firm request for help. But, Sir Geoffrey said, Britain was told that no decision had been taken in Washington

Sunday

United States: According to President Reagan, the US received an urgent formal request for military assistance from OECS. By late Sunday, President coming round to the view that military action should be taken, according to US officials.

Britain: British High Commission in Barbados told that a formal request for British participation in multi-national force would probably be handed over later in the day. But, Sir Geoffrey, Howe said yesterday, this did not hanpen. Instead the Government heard that a meeting of nearly all Caribbean countries in Trinidad (only Grenada was absent) had called for political and economic measures rather than military steps against Grenada.

Monday Tuesday

United States: President

United States: Early in the morning, United States and Caribbean
forces landed in Grenada. Reagan took the final decision to invade during the afternoon. Britain: Ministers met in Members of Congress only learnt of British the morning to discuss developements. The Britobjections to the invasion after Mrs Thatcher's statement in the House of ish ambassador Washington was Commons during the afternoon. President structed to put to the US Administration factors Reagan announced details of the invasion which "would have to be carefully weighted". That evening President Reagan called Mrs That-

Britain: According to Sir. Geoffrey Howe, President cher to say he was giving Reagan sent a message to serious consideration to Mrs Thatcher informing the request. He promised her that he had taken Britain's reservations on in inform Mrs Thatcher in advance to any decision being taken. While that board but that he had decided that US partici-pation in the multimessage was being con-sidered at Downing Street national force would go President phoned again to say the he had decided to ahead. In a statement to the Commons in the respond positively to the afternoon, Mrs Thatcher request. Mrs Thatcher replied by expressing Britain's concern made it clear that she disapproved of the US

Confusion comes to a head in time of crises

The situation inside the once-pleasant, but now crisis- the telephone conversation torn, head Sir Geoffrey Howe between Mr Reagan and Mrs remained confused last night. Sir Geoffrey, the Foreign Secretary, spoke twice in an

and again winding up.
Forces loyal to the United States were thought to be in control of large areas of both Sir Geoffrey's speeches: But there appeared to be pockets of resistance to the Americans whenever Sir Geiffrey was asked to say whether he actually condemned or approved President Reagan's action in Grenada.

One military success for Sir Geoffrey

Mr Healey, Dr David Owen for the Social Democrats, and many lesser figures, kept on asking this embarrassing quesasking this embarrassing ques-tion. Sir Geoffiey kept on replying that it was possible to have "two views" about the matter, which at least raised the possibility that in parts he was holding out against the American forces who appeared to have occupied the rest of his two speeches. rest of his two speeches.
Sir Geoffrey had only one military success during what was perhaps the most difficult debate of his amiable career. He seemed to have found Grenada's Governor General. That high personage had got lost during Sir Geoffrey's answers to questions in the House on Tuesday, when the Foreign Secretary explained that he was "unable to say" where the man was.

Now Sir Geoffrey said the Governor General had been found, but preferred not to say where he was at present. One other matter should be cleared up. The Governor General was described by me yesterday as being white. Helpful col-leagues have pointed out that, like most people in Grenada, he is in fact black. Perhaps that explains why Sir Geoffrey could not find him, there being so many of them about.

Mr Healey opened the attack. Making use of all the low arts of which he is a grand master, he gave the Labour benches the first boost to their morale since the general election or possibly since, with the fall of Goose Green, they lost all hope of a British military debacle in the Falk-

Next Mr Healey seized on the hapless Governor General. What had Sir Geoffrey meant the previous day that this personage might have some future constitutional rele to play? At whose beliest? "The Governor General is responsible to Her Majesty, the Queen, and not the American President," intoned Mr Healey, "Hear, hear," roared all those famatical royalists behind him.

hind him. Mr Healey triumphantly noted the alleged closeness of the relationship which the Prime Minister had claimed with the American president.
He ignored the equally close relationship claimed by Lord Wilson with Mr Lyndon Johnson, Mr Callaghan with Mr Carter and himself, in foreign affairs debates with all the grandest bores in Washington: A masterly performance. Sticking to the two provocation, Sir Geoffrey bravely went shead with his determination to make himself look pathetic by sticking to the "two views" formula. Later anti-Americans dominated the debate. Mr Enoch Powell quoted Washington on the unwisdom of either hating or loving a foreign country in a powerful speech inspired by his manifest hatred of America.

The left-winger Mr Jeremy Corbyn, whose constituency is in fsington, which left-wing ruled borough is "twinned" with Grenada, insisted, as left wingers always do about their favourite regimes, that the one in Grenada had improved "health care, education, and housing" and had secured "an end to illiteracy": the latter a policy denounced as elitist

The papers

Whether President Reagan was right to invade the independent Commonwealth state of Grenada or not depends on the outcome, the Daily Star says. "If his marines swiftly hand the island back to the Governor-General to form democratic civilian administrati democratic civilian administration, and if they leave security in the hands of a joint Caribbean force, well and good. That is the stated intention. If he sticks to it the invasion could have a concrete effect on stabilizing the eastern Caribbean and turning back the insidious tide of Marxism. The paper points out that it is, after all, a police action urged on Mr Reagan by seven independent Caribbean states – not some mad solo exercise in Commie-bashing.
